GUZARAT TALUKDAR'S ACT (VI OF 1888).

——— S. 2 (1) (a)—Mulgameti—Meaning of—Kathis of Salangpur—Status of—Talukdars.

The Talukdari estates in Guzarat are the remnants of old Rajput kingdoms, those disintegrated being either disrupted by internecine feuds or crushed by foreign invaders. The Subordinate States thus formed were known by names generally indicative of their origin. The smallest of those subordinate rulers was the Gameti or ruler of a single village. Under the British rule the old rulership slowly degraded into a mere landlord estate. A Talukdari is therefore an estate which connoted rulership in pre-British times but which is now a landlord estate to which some seignorial or subordinate rights may or may not still be attached. When the estate connoted rulership of a single village the holder is a Mulgameti (i.e.) a gameti who has lost all or most of his lordships. As these estates were very small the holder was not included in the definition of Taluqdar until the Amending Act (II of 1905) recognised as a Taluqdar a Mulgameti who holds lands directly from Government. Per Marten, J:—A mulgameti is one who is descended from a former ruler and owner of the village and still retains by regrant or otherwise some portion of the lands or interests therein of such former ruler and owner, but not necessarily any of his governing rights. The kathis of the village of Salangpur in the Dhanduka Taluka of the District of Ahmedabad are Mulgametis but they do not hold land directly from the Government and are not therefore Talukdars within the meaning of S. 2 (1) (a) of the Guzarat Talukdar's Act, 1888 as amended by S. 2 (1) of Act II of 1905. ——— S. 16 — Decision contemplated by section—Nature of—Order rejecting an application for partition.

The only kind of decision contemplated by S. 16 of the Gujarat Talukdar's Act is the decision referred to in S. 15 (2) which must be given after the making of all necessary inquiries and the taking of such evidence as may be adduced. An order rejecting an application for partition is not a "decision" within S. 16 (1). (Batchelor and Rao, JJ.) GAMBHIR SINGH v. AGAR SINGH. 9 I.C. 943 = 13 Bom. L.R. 118.

Where a person asserting the rights of a mortgagee appealed against the decree of a Subordinate Judge negativing those rights but in the meantime the property passed under the management of Talukdari Settlement Officer, under the Act and a notification under S. 29 (B) of that Act was issued by him calling on all claimants to appear and establish their rights within six months of the date of the notification but the person asserting the rights of mortgagee could not establish his claim within time as the appellate decree in his favour was passed after the period of six months in the notification and the Talukdari Settlement Officer appealed, against the decree, as a person representing the estate but failed and the decree holder applied for certificate for execution under S. 29-B of the Act. Held that (1) As the appeal was not heard and decided within 6 months from the notification, the appellant was unable to establish his claim. Dedication.

———Dedication — Proof of — Intention—User by public—Effect of—Public street—Road through private market when public trade by license.

To constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway by the owner of the soil, there must be an intention to dedicate by the owner of the soil. User by the public is only evidence of such intention. There may be a dedication by the public for a limited purpose e.g., footway, horseway, etc. but there cannot be a dedication to a limited part of the public. Poole v. Haskinson, 11 M. and W. 827, Rel. In determining whether a road through private property is a public high way though no express dedication is proved, it is of crucial importance to distinguish between evidence showing an intention to dedicate to public generally and evidence showing that visitors to or traders with tenants whose shops abut on the road have, by permission a right of passage. (P.C.) 87 = 56 I.C. 1 = 28 M.L.T. 1 (P.C.)
[On appeal from 38 I.C. 458.]

———Dedication of—Acceptance, if necessary.

No formal act by any person or authority is required for the acceptance of a highway dedicated to the public use, such acceptance can be inferred from the public user of the way. (Chatterjee and Walmsley, JJ.) SURAJ MAL KHARAD v. AKSHOY KUMAR ROY.
40 I.C. 74 = 21 C.W.N. 595.

———Dedication—Presumption—User.

The principles of the English law regarding the presumed dedication of a road to the public arising from user of such road by the public being founded on reason and common-sense and conducive to public convenience, are applicable to India. 62 P.R. 1898, Foll. (Johnstone, C.J. and Scott-Smith, J.) MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, KARNAL v. MUHAMMAD RUSTAM ALI KHAN. 108 P.R. 1916 = 35 I.C. 458 = 146 P.W.R. 1916.
[On appeal see 56 I.C. 1 = 1 Lah. 117 (P.C.)

———Dedication to class — Rights over other's property.

Public highway cannot be dedicated to a class. All rights over other's property are private whether they belong to a class or an individual and whether they arise from any source. (Ayling and Napier, JJ.) SUBBAYA NADAN v. AIYAVOO REDDY. 5 L.W. 782 = 37 I.C. 977 = (1917) M.W.N. 70.

———Dedication—Presumption from user,

If the public have been using the streets belonging to a temple for a very long time for passing and re-passing, this may be sufficient to raise a presumption of the dedication of the streets to the public for use as a highway. (Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ.) ALAGASINGA BHATTAR v. TALUK BOARD RAJAMUNDRY.
16 I.C. 626 = 12 M.L.T. 159.

———Dedication—Proof of—Grant User.

Public rights of way as distinguished from easement arise from a dedication to the public by the owner of the soil over which they pass. Dedication arises from a gift expressed in a deed or implied from custom and user. Where a person encloses a public path over his land and allows any new one to be opened in its place, he must be presumed to have made a fresh grant to the public of the new path. (Batten, A.J.C.) LAXMAN v. TUKIA.
44 I.C. 868 = 14 N.L.R. 78.

———Dedication — Inference from user—English law—Applicability of.

It is competent to a Court to draw an inference of dedication of a highway to the public from long user. Though the general principles of English Common law as regards highways are applicable to India, the whole of the English Common law should not be bodily imported. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.) RAI BAIJRANG BAHADUR SINGH v. BABU BADRI NATH. 4 U.P.L.R. (P.C.) 105 = 9 O.L.J. 497 = 1923 Oudh 26.

Obstruction.

———Obstruction—Special damages.

A narrowing of a public highway practically amounting to blocking it, is a special damage.

HIGHWAY—Obstruction.

(Sunder Lal, J.) RAM KRISHUN v. BANWARI RAI. 25 I.C. 266.

———Obstruction — Village pathway — Special damage not necessary to enforce right to pathway.

The plaintiffs asked for declaration of a village pathway used by all the people of the village for certain specified purposes. The defendants contended that the alleged pathway was not a public highway but was a permissive foot track. Held, that the suit was for the enforcement of a village pathway and no question of special damage arose in the case. 15 Cal. 460 Foll. It is only in the case of a public highway that the question of special damage arises; where the case is one of a village pathway, there is no question of special damage. 23 C.W N. 91, Ref. (Mookerjee and Rankin, JJ.) HARISH CHANDRA SAHA v. HARISHCHANDRA CHACKERBUTTY. 1923 Cal. 622.

———Obstruction—Injunction to restrain—Special damage—Inability to commit nuisance.

In the absence of proof of special damage to plaintiff beyond that suffered by the rest of the public who used the way there was no cause of action to the plaintiff to sue for injunction. If the passage was a public highway, the plaintiff was not entitled to erect a scaffolding on it and he could not sue in respect of a nuisance when the special damage he asserted was his own inability to commit a nuisance. Beachcroft, J.) SHYAM LAL DEY v. MANMATHA NATH SARKAR. 31 I.C. 324.

Proof by the plaintiff that he and his servants had been compelled to go by a longer route and thereby incur additional expense is sufficient special damage entitling the plaintiff to sue for removal of an obstruction of a highway. Infringement of a pathway in which plaintiff had got a right with other villages by reason of a grant implied from long user does not require special damage to give the plaintiff a cause of action. The mere fact that the pathway is described in the plaint as a public pathway would not make any difference. (Fletcher and Huda, JJ.) HARIHAR DAS v. CHANDRA KUMAR GUHA. 49 I.C. 79=23 C.W.N. 91.

———Obstruction — Suit for removal of—Proof of special damage necessary—Admission by one defendant, if binds others.

A suit for the removal of an obstruction to a public road will lie only on proof of special damage to the plaintiff. An admission in such a suit by one defendant cannot bind the others. (Coxe and Chatterjea, JJ.) HEYAT BAKSH v. LACHMINIA. 22 I.C. 916.

———Obstruction—Special damage—Village pathway.

A public highway is different from a way over which a section of the public may have a right of way. Under S. 30 of the C.P.C., (1882) a suit to vindicate the plaintiff's right to village pathway obstructed by the defendant

The agreement further provided that in case a son should be subsequently born to the adopter both would be equally entitled to all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties which might be left by him. ———Adoption—Widow—Consent of sapindas—Whose consent necessary — Omission to ask for consent.

Under the Dravidian custom, in the absence of authority from her deceased husband, a widow may adopt a son with the assent of all his male agnates. 12 M.I.A. 397, Foll.; 1 Mad. 174; 1 Mad. 69, Dist and Foll. In the case of an undivided family the consent must be obtained by a widow within that family. If the father-in-law is alive, from him: if not from the deceased husband's brother, the assent of separate and remote kinsmen is insufficient. The principle is the same if the husband dies separate from his kindred. In considering what assent is sufficient, rights of property cannot be disregarded: and the widow cannot be allowed to adopt on the assent of remoter relations when there are nearer one in existence. It is the duty of the widow to apply for the consent of all the nearest sapindas and it is not a good reason for her failure to so apply that the widow knew that the nearest sapindas if asked for their consent would have refused. There must be something more than a promise of payment to raise the plea of the invalidity of the consent on the ground that it was corruptly given. Obiter: Neither a sapinda who has given his consent for a bribe or through corruption nor any one claiming through such a sapinda, can set up the invalidity of the adoption on the ground that there was no proper consent. ———Adoption — Widow — Consent of sapindas

The right of the Court to scrutinise the kinsmen's reasons extends only where consent is refused and not where consent is given inasmuch as the law imposes a responsibility upon kinsmen in granting their consent to an adoption. A daughter's son is not entitled to be consulted regarding an adoption by a widow who has obtained the consent of the nearest sapindas, as he is not a gnati, and Bhinnagotra sapindas are not included under the term sapindas in the texts which require their consent to an adoption. Consent of the Sapindas to an adoption by the widow is material as guaranteeing the propriety of the widow's action in making the adoption. Where such consent has not been shown to have been obtained by fraud, coercion or corruption, it is sufficient authority for the adoption. ——Adoption —Widow— Limits of her power.

The doctrine of vesting and divesting of an estate by an adoption applies to separate as well as joint property. The rule that in order that an estate once vested may be divested, the adoption should be made to the last male holder, is inapplicable to co-parcenary properties. There is no limit of time within which a widow should make an adoption where a person is in existence who is competent to adopt a boy in whom the full proprietary title will vest, it must be taken to be the limit of the exercise of the power by the widow to make successive adoptions. Where the exercise of the power to make a second adoption will not result in creating a new line of succession but will only transfer the estate from one intermediate owner to another with the prospect of the latter even to be divested, the limits of the power must be taken to have been reached. Adoption—Widow—Mahratta School.

———Adoption—Widow—Mahratta School.

It is a general principle of Hindu Law as to adoptions that directions may be given by the husband orally or in writing, as for instance by a will, as to the way in which his widow should exercise a power of adoption to him and it is the duty of the widow to obey such directions. A direction to operate as a prohibition against a Hindu widow adopting a boy to her husband as a son except the boy named by him must be explicitly made and clearly intended by the husband to limit the discretion of his widow for all time, and on every occasion on which otherwise after his death, his widow might validly make an adoption to him. In the Mahratta Country of the Presidency of Bombay, a Hindu widow, who is sole or joint heir to her husband's estate, may adopt a son to her deceased husband without authority from her husband and without the consent of his kindred, if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive nor in ignorance of her right. But she cannot adopt where her husband has expressly forbidden an adoption. (Sir John Edge). YADAO v. NAMDEO. 17 N.L R. 145= 64 I.C. 536=43 I.A. 513 (P C.).

———Alienation—Co-parcener — Rights of alienee.

In Bombay the sale of a co-parcener's share is not invalid though the share is described in the deed as the whole property. The purchaser, however, cannot get joint possession but he may demand partition. He can however obtain a direction that he be left to recover the interest of the vendor in the particular property by a separate suit for partition in which all co-parceners and all family properties should be joined. HINDU LAW—Alienation—Co-parcener.

———Alienation—Co-parcener — Remedy of alienee—Partition suit.

The remedy of the alienee from a co-parcener is to sue for a general partition, in case the other co-parceners claim their share of the alienated property (Batchelor, C.J. and Kemp, J.) HANMANDAS RAMDAYAL v. VALABHADAS SHANKARDAS. 43 Bom. 17=46 I.C. 133=20 Bom. L.R. 472.

———Alienation — Co-parcener—Rights of alienee—Setting aside.

Alienee from co-parcener only gets a right to partition and not to possession before such partition. A sale by one co-parcener even of his share can be set aside by his co-parceners if the sale is without consideration as it is void altogether. (Scott, C.J. and Heaton, J.) ———Alienation—Co-parcener—Agreement to sell or lease share—Specific performance.

A member of a Mitakshara joint family is not entitled to any specific property and cannot make a valid alienation of it. An agreement by him to sell or lease his share is not specifically enforceable. If the manager contracts on behalf of himself and the other co-parcener to sell the entire property without necessity, the vendee will be entitled only to damages and not to specific performance. ———Alienation—Co-parcener—Alienee's rights—Suit by surviving member for recovery of property alienated—Allotment of property alienated to vendee—Conditions—Mesne profits—Plaintiff's right to—Manager—Sale by—Voidable and not void.

An alienee from an undivided co-parcener has a right to sue for the partition of the family property and to recover his alienor's share, in the case of a sale of an undivided share, that share, and in the case of a sale of a specific item of property, an equitable right to have that property assigned, if possible, to his alienor's share. The share of the alienor which passes to the alienee is the share to which the former was entitled at the date of alienation. In a suit by a co-parcener for the recovery of the property alienated by another co-parcener or for partition, the alienee is entitled to claim partition, if it can conveniently be done. In a suit by a grandson to recover possession of properties sold by his deceased grandfather, the Court below held that the sale was not for necessity and gave a decree to the plaintiff for a division of the property into two parts and for recovery by plaintiff of one-half with mesne profits from the date of sale. On appeal by the alienee it appeared that the plaintiff was the only surviving member of the family, and that, at the date of the sale, the grandfather was entitled, as and for his share, to property at least equal in value to the property sold and that there would be no inconvenience in allotting entire property to the alienee. Held, that the alienee was entitled to retain the whole of the suit property, that the plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed, and that the plaintiff was not therefore entitled to any mesne profits. Held further that, the sale being by a manager the plaintiff would in no event ———Alienation— Co-parcener — Rights of alienee—Allotment of whole of alienated property to purchaser in — Conditions—Sale by member on his own behalf and on behalf of other members—Sale not in interests of family —Security bond taken by purchaser from vendor to indemnify former against loss due to claim by other members—Effect.

A purchaser from a member of a Joint Hindu family of property which that member has no right to sell, it being the joint property, can enforce the sale only by a partition of the entire family property ; and if, in such partition, the property sold can, with due regard to the interests of the other sharers to the debts due by the family, and to an equitable allocation of the various items of family property to shares of the several co-parceners, be wholly allotted to the vendor's share, the purchaser will be entitled to the whole property which the vendor professed to convey to him. Whether the alienee in such cases can get the property does not depend upon whether a suit is first brought by him for a partition of the whole joint property or by the other co-parceners for a partition of a part. The decision in 40 C. 966 ; 25 M.L.J. 512 (P.C.) is authority for the position that even in a suit by the other co-parcener for a share of the alienated property, it would be open to the Court on the application of the alienee to decree a general partition in which the principle of equity mentioned above should be applied. The principle of equity applies equally to cases in which the alienor purports to sell the property on behalf of himself and of the other co-parceners and to those in which he purports to sell the property as his own. It applies whether or not the sale was a proper alienation in the interests of the joint family. The purchaser is not to be deprived of this equity merely because, at the time of the sale, he took from the vendor a security bond (in the form of a charge on other joint family property) by which the vendor gave him an indemnity against the loss that might arise by any claim of the vendor's minor son. ———Alienation—Co-parcener—Gift—Consideration of marriage.

In the Madras Presidency it is competent to a co-parcener to alienate his share in the whole of the family property or in any particular item of it, for valuable consideration but he cannot make a valid gift of his share. This power of the co-parcener to alienate his share for consideration is not confined to sales or mortgages, but includes every kind of alienation for valuable consideration. Where a co-parcener settles property on the bridegroom-elect in consideration of the latter marrying the co-parcener's foster-daughter, the alienation is supported by consideration and is enforceable against the co-parcener's share in the family properties. A collective decree obtained against some of the co-parceners in a joint family on a sham transaction is binding on those co-parceners themselves but not the others. If the joint family property is sold in execution of the decree the other co-parceners can sue for the recovery of their shares only. In such a suit a decree for partition can be made without driving the purchasers to a fresh suit. (Spencer and Krishnan, JJ.) NADHAMUNI IYER v APPU ODAYAN. 48 I C. 799.

The rules that a sale of family property in execution of a decree obtained against a Hindu father for debts which are neither illegal nor immoral involves the sale of the interest of his son or sons, therein does not always apply. The creditor's conduct for example may evidence his intention not to proceed against the interest of the son or sons. This is peculiarly so where the form of his proceedings point to an election to seek execution against his own debtor's interest and no further. Where the certificate of sale recited that the decree-holder has bought "the right and interest of the judgment-debtor (the father) to be allotted by division". Held that there was strong indication of an intention to proceed against the father's interest only. Under the Mitakshara Law a judgment against the father alone can always be executed against the whole joint family property except where the debt in respect of which the judgment was obtained was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. The words "right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor (father)," in the sale certificate do not necessarily import that when the father is the judgment-debtor, nothing but his share of the joint family property is sold. There is no reason why the execution creditor should be deprived of his undoubted rights by such a narrow construction. In cases of this kind the substance and not the technicalities of the transaction should be regarded. Having regarded to the conduct of the sons in the case and to the price paid by the execution creditor, who purchased the property, it was held that the intention was to sell the whole property including the interest of the

Under the Mitakshara Law the joint family property, which is owned by all the members of the family, as co-parceners, cannot be the subject of a gift, a sale or mortgage except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. The father as manager and head of the family can sell or mortgage the property so as to bind his sons, for family or estate necessity. The principle in regard to this is analogous to the power vested in the head of a religious endowment or mutt or in the guardian of an infant. The father can also validly alienate the joint family property to discharge a debt which was really antecedent to the alienation (i.e) which was incurred wholly apart from the security of the joint family property and which is not proved to have been incurred for immoral purposes. The doctrine of onus probandi in cases where legal necessity is urged, is based largely upon the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons. Where a mortgagee sued on a mortgage granted 27 years before at an exhorbitant rate of interest, and nothing had been done in the interval, the onus of proving its binding nature as against the sons was rightly laid on the mortgagee. 6 M.I.A. 393, Ref. The Court should also see if the amount covered by legal necessity could have been raised without the alienation in question. The onus of proving legal necessity or inquiry enough to satisfy a prudent man that the necessity did exist, lies on the creditor in the first instance, in a suit, questioning an alienation by the father of a joint Hindu family, brought by the son; and that the onus is not affected by the fact that a pre-emption has taken place and that it is the pre-emptor himself against whom the relief is claimed. ——Alienation—Father— Necessity—Pressure—Existence of debts

In order to justify an alienation made by the father of a joint Hindu family it is not sufficient in law to show that at the time of the alienation debts binding on the family were outstanding. It must be further shown that the alienation had to be undertaken under the pressure of a present necessity for the discharge of the debts. The power of the father to charge the estate can only be exercised rightly in case of need or for the benefit of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. These observations apply to a mortgage as well as a sale. (Rafique and Lindsay, JJ.) BANDHU RAM v RAM KISHUN SONAR. 21 A L.J. 884 = L. R. 4 A 406 = 1923 All. 535.

Where a Hindu son sues to set aside an alienation of ancestral property made by his father on the ground that it is not binding upon him and the Court finds that out of the sale consideration, a portion was not required for family necessity the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for possession subject to his re-imbursing the purchaser to the extent to which the sale was a valid sale. The form of decree in a case of this kind should, therefore, be a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff subject to his paying to the purchaser so much of the consideration as was required for the necessity of the family. ———Alienation—Father—Mortgage—Sons' liability.

There is a distinction between the sons' liability under a mortgage executed by a father of a joint Hindu family and his remedy after proceedings taken against the father on foot of the mortgage. In the case of a joint Mitakshara family consisting of a father and minor sons, the father is necessarily the manager of the joint family, and as such, for all purposes, is a representative of the family. In the case of a joint Mitakshara family where the father, the managing member mortgaged family property for an antecedent debt and a suit was brought and decree obtained against the father, such suit and decree should be regarded as instituted and pronounced against him, in his representative capacity ; and if a son after a decree being obtained against the father, upon a mortgage executed by the father, sues to have it declared that his share is not liable to satisfy the said decree, or after a sale in execution of such a decree, sues to recover possession of his share, he cannot succeed, unless he proves that the debt was contracted for immoral or illegal purposes, or that the debt was of an illusory character. The rule as laid down in Suraj Bansi Koer's case is not limited to the cases in which the property had passed out of the hands of the family and gone into the hands of persons who were neither previous creditors when the sale is a private alienation nor judgment-creditors when the sale is by public auction. a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debts and in no others, the sons are not under an obligation to show that the debts represented by a mortgage executed by the father were debts which were contracted for immoral or other purposes not binding on the estate. A decree, unless it is binding on the sons, does not improve the position of the creditor any more than a sale which a father effects in order to pay a debt incurred by himself on the security of the mortgaged property. The exception to the general rule that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate, which is under his charge, cannot be extended where a liability under a mortgage merges into a decree, unless that decree can by any rule of law be held to be binding on the other members of the family. If a mortgage is not valid so far as it purports to encumber the joint family property, it cannot become a just and legal consideration, if, in the absence of the sons of the mortgagor a decree has been obtained on foot thereof against the mortgagor. Otherwise the protection intended for the junior members of the family can in that way be easily circumvented and become illusory. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.C.) Where joint family property goes away either by a father's alienation to pay off an antecedent debt or in execution of a decree for the father's debt, the sons, by virtue of their pious obligation to pay their father's debts, cannot recover the property. ———Alienation—Father—Suit to set aside by subsequently born son—Limitation.

The right of a subsequently born son to challenge the alienation by his ancestor on the ground of the absence of legal necessity therefor comes into existence as soon as the alienation is made and is available to any member of the joint family, who, being in existence at that time, has not been a consenting party to the alienation. Therefore limitation begins to run from the date of the alienation and inasmuch as no fresh cause of action accrues to a subsequently born son a suit by such son to challenge the alienation must be brought within the original period of limitation. ———Alienation — Father — Essentials of validity.

The elements necessary to validate an alienation are that the purpose for which the money was borrowed was necessary by law and that there was pressure on the estate sufficient to render the alienation necessary. An alienation could be upheld where if only that amount had been borrowed, which the Court finds for legal necessity, a mortgage would still have been necessary; if not the alienation should be set aside on condition that the creditor be repaid the money advanced with interest. Where there is a delay in impeaching an alienation by a Hindu father of the family property the burden of proving that the alienation was not for a legal necessity is upon those who seek to have the alienation set aside. A sale of a small portion of a joint Hindu family property to pay off a portion of a debt incurred for the purchase of acquiring new property may be justified. Where the bulk of ———Alienation — Guardian — Binding nature on minor.

The test with regard to the binding nature of an alienation by a natural guardian upon the minor as laid down in Hunooman Persaud's case 6 M.I.A., p. 393, is that the power must be exercised by the guardian rightly for necessity or for the benefit of the infant. It would be open to the alienee to establish that he had made all proper and necessary enquiries and that he had acted in good faith in advancing the moneys to the natural guardian of the minor. (*L. ———Alienation—Guardian—Prudence and necessity—De facto guardian.

The guardian of a minor is not limited only to making such dispositions of the latter's property as he is compelled to make by sheer necessity. Whether what he did was or was not for the benefit of the minor and as such binding on the latter was determined in this case by asking what would have been the probable result if the guardian had not taken the steps he did take and as it appeared that bigger sacrifices would have become inevitable if the steps in question had not been taken, if justified by unavoidable necessity. This is so whether the lands are agricultural lands or a building site, for in either case the debutter estate is deprived of the chance it would have, if the rent were variable of deriving benefit from the enchancement in value of the future of the lands leased. 13 M.I.A. 270; 31 I.A. 83; 26 I.A. 148, Ref. The expression "benefit to the estate" as justifying an alienation by the guardian of an infant or the trustee of a religious endowment cannot be precisely defined; but it includes the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portions of it from injury or deterioration and such like things. 6 M.I.A. 393; 2 I.A. 145; 4 I.A. 52, Ref. A shebait would not be justified in selling debutter land solely for the purpose of getting capital to embark on a money lending business, however, attractive and lucrative it might be. Nor is he entitled to alienate part of the endowment of his own charity to enrich a separate and alien charity. A custom authorising the shebait of a temple to alienate dedicated property absolutely at his will and pleasure would be opposed to the intention of the original endower who presumably meant the worship to be perpetual. In a suit on a mortgage granted over the property of a mutt by its head, the onus is on those representing the mortgagee to prove that the debt was incurred for a necessary expense of the institution itself. Where however many years have elapsed since the debt was originally incurred, both lender and borrower being dead, and succeeding heads of the mutt have recognised the debt as binding on the Mutt, the Court should be more readily satisfied than where the mortgage is of more recent date or its validity has been disputed. In the absence of evidence tending to shake confidence in the transactions themselves or in the conduct and case of the manager or of the creditor, the onus is shifted back on to the sons or members of the family who wish to repudiate a mortgage by the manager though the initial onus is on the creditor to prove necessity. As a matter of business and common sense Courts will decline to take judicial notice of the fact that fathers of joint Hindu families or managers or kartas as the case may be, where the father is dead are necessarily and chiefly occupied in going out of their way to borrow money for purposes which they know to be unlawful and which can confer no benefit upon the general body of the family to which they belong and of which they are respected heads. On the contrary, the presumption must be in their favour, viz., that inasmuch as their own interest are indissolubly interwoven with the interests, and the affections, of the other members, the borrowing is to assist and benefit the joint family. Though the onus of proof to support a mortgage of family property is on the creditor the question of onus is not a mere question of law. Once the principle of onus has been settled, the question still remains in the decision of each particular case, as to whether having regard to the transaction which have been established by evidence, the onus still remains where it was or whether, on the other hand it has been made to shift. In each particular case whether the onus has been shifted or not, becomes a mixed question of fact and law or rather a question of the due application of recognised principle to the varying circumstances of each case. 31 A. 176; 39 A. 437; 43 I.A. 249 Rel. ———Alienation—Manager of joint family—Necessity—Test of.

Where a portion of the consideration for sale of ancestral property by the manager of a joint family is found to be binding on the family, the question is not whether the consideration, which was taken for legal necessity, formed the bulk of the consideration, but whether the portion, which was not taken for legal necessity, was such a small portion as might reasonably be left out of account. It is not always possible for the manager of a joint Hindu family to sell property exactly for the amount for which the legal necessity might exist. He might be able to raise a loan by a mortgage, but it might not always be possible for him to find a mortgagee willing to take a mortgage of the property for the amount required unless the security given leaves a sufficient margin to cover the principal and interest that might eventually fall due on that transaction. In many cases the sale of a portion might be out of question and fails to command either a purchaser or its proper value. (Lindsay and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ). To ascertain what passes at a sale in execution of a decree against the manager it is necessary to look (1) at the circumstances attending the creation of the debt, (2) form of plaintiff's claim, (3) the decree, (4) attachment, (5) sale proclamation, (6) certificate of sale. A decree against a Mitakshara father as manager of the family under the Transfer of Property Act for sale of properties not mortgaged is not in the nature of a personal decree against the father as a member and all the family properties pass by sale in execution of such a decree. The starting of a prospective trade is not a ground justifying alienation of family properties by the manager. An alienation of joint family properties for the purpose of purchasing other properties instead is not binding on the members of the family, at any rate in the absence of clear benefit to the family. Where the sale-deed itself does not show any necessary purpose and there is no evidence of necessity, the fact that the adult members of the family joined in it does not give any weight to the transaction. Where the co-parceners of a joint family sue to set aside alienations by the Manager they are not as of right, entitled to mesne profits from the date of alienation.

A co-parcener in a joint Hindu family property, who establishes that a member of the family has alienated family property without legal necessity, can sue to recover the whole property. He cannot be allowed to sue for his own share of any specific portion thereof for the simple reason that in a Mitakshara joint family no particular share can be predicted as belonging to any individual member. The only concession, which the Courts have so far made in the direction of allowing the share of the transferor to be affected, is where the share of the transferor has been attached in execution of any money-decree. In such a case, the Courts have held that a co-sharer who sues for the recovery of the whole property will be allowed to recover, but it will be declared that the purchaser of the interest of the transferor is entitled to a partition and to recover thereafter that portion of the property which represents the transferor's interest therein. ———Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner—Distinction between—Test of—Reversioner taking mortgage from alienee, if estopped.

HINDU LAW—Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner.

There is a distinction between the power of a Hindu widow to surrender or relinquish the estate of her deceased husband and her power to alienate it for necessity. She can surrender her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time, but the surrender must be bona fide, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. In this case the question of necessity does not arise. If the widow alienates the whole property and all the nearest reversioners consent, then the alienation falls under this head of surrender. When the alienation of the whole or part of the property is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then if actual necessity or bona fide enquiry and belief by the alienee is not proved aliunde, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to object would be presumptive proof which if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one. 30 All. 1, P.C., Dist. Where a Hindu widow transferred property to an alienee from whom a prospective reversioner takes a mortgage of a portion of the property, the reversioner is not estopped from disputing the validity of the alienation on the death of the widow. It lies on a purchaser from a Hindu female to acquaint himself with the extent of her powers. A reversioner with a mere expectancy who joins in the conveyance by the limited owner cannot validate it, if it is otherwise invalid. The reversioner so joining is not estopped from denying the vendor's power to convey more than her life-interest unless the purchaser has been misled after enquiry. Except in that case therefore, the conveyance does not operate on any interest acquired after the vendor's death, by the reversioner joining in the conveyance. To be valid as against the reversioners or affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted for valid and legal necessity, and the onus of establishing such necessity rests heavily on those who claim the benefit of the transaction. The requirement of the law may, however, be fulfilled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to or in the transaction. But such consent must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings they concurred in binding their interest; and such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony. The consent must be of all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. The plaintiffs, the actual reversioners and the sons of one of the ijaradars, had for a period of 11 years preceding the death of the widow acted up to the terms of the said arrangement and took benefits thereunder, but, subsequently, on the death of the widow brought a suit for possession of some of the properties demised on the ground that the arrangement above set forth was fraudulent and not supported by any legal necessity and so not binding upon them. Held, that the arrangement impugned was legal and binding

The propriety of an alienation with the consent of the next reversioner may come in question not only with reference to the conduct of the widow, whether or not she was justified by necessity, but also with reference to the conduct of the next reversioner whether

The transaction would stand no higher than a partial alienation in his favour and would have to be judged from that standpoint. Nevertheless, whatever might be said of the conduct of the widow or the next reversioner, the transferee, if he made due enquiry and acted bona fide, would still acquire a good title. ——Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner—When presumed.

A reversioner's consent to an alienation of a widow's estate will be presumed if his subsequent acts show that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of his dealings, he concurred in binding his interests as reversioner, and the reversioner in such a case, will be estopped from disputing the alienation. 28 M.L.J. 1; 42 Cal. 876, Ref. ——Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner—Effect.

Consent by a reversioner to an alienation made by a Hindu widow by itself makes the transaction valid, and is not merely presumptive and rebuttable evidence of necessity. 30 All. 1; 28 M.L.J. 1, Ref. ——Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner—Effect.

The onus of proving that a charge created by the widow is binding on the reversioners, lies heavily on the persons who claim the benefit of the transactions and when the only evidence let in was that a series of documents executed by the widow, attested by the reversioners and the widow had been maintaining a large number of persons, related to her but not relating to the husband's family. Held, the evidence was insufficient to prove necessity. 19 C.W.N. 370, Foll. ——Alienation — Widow — Consent of reversioner—Effect of.

The effect of the consent of the next reversioner to an alienation by the widow is that it makes it conclusive. And Courts are bound to presume the validity of the alienation made with the consent of the next reversioner. But such a presumption does not arise when a reversioner accepts a conveyance in his own favour. The doctrine of validation by assent is based on the doctrine that a person may well be presumed not to act against his interest. The assent also raises an estoppel against the person assenting. The assent or ratification by the next reversioner need not be at or before the date of the alienation. It is enough if he ratified the transaction. 30 All. 1 (P.C.), Ref. ———Alienation—Widow—Gift—If challenged by reversioners—Strangers if can—Impeach—Nature of the transaction.

A sale, mortgage or gift by a Hindu widow which purports to pass the absolute title is valid against every one except the reversioners and unless the reversioners elect to treat it as a nullity, it subsists as against every one else. A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate if subject to certain conditions being complied with; her alienation is not therefore absolutely void but is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure, treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he might show his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. Consequently a gift of the whole of her husband's property made by a Hindu widow not challenged by the reversioner during her lifetime and acquiesced in by those who would take a vested interest after her death cannot be challenged by any one else. It is the reversioners and the reversioners alone who can dispute the gift. If they choose to allow the property to which they are entitled to remain in the possession of the donee that

In the case of a mortgage, made by a widow, it is incumbent on the mortgagee to show not only that there was necessity to borrow, but also that it was not unreasonable to borrow at a high rate and upon the particular terms, and, if this is not shown, the rate and terms would not stand even though the charge may be upheld. ————Alienation—Widow—Necessity.

The expression "necessity" when used in connection with an alienation by a Hindu widow, has a somewhat special, almost technical, meaning. A widow can alienate if there are no other means available for the obligatory ceremonies to secure the repose of the soul of her husband. She can alienate immoveable property to pay the last owner's debts or (if there is no other avaliable source of supply) for her own or for infant children's maintenance. Necessity does not mean actual

A Hindu who was separate, died leaving behind, two widows, defendant No. 1 and another. He possessed considerable property but was heavily in debts and the property in question was subject to a mortgage. The two widows separated and a moiety of the property was enjoyed by each, subject to a proportionate share of mortgage debt. Defendant (1) sold her share for Rs. 5,300 to satisfy a mortgage decree for Rs. 4,588-2-2 and the balance Rs. 711-13-10 was appropriated to reimburse herself for expenses of her husband's brother's daughter's marriage. The plaintiff, the nearest surviving agnate brought a suit after a long delay for a declaration that the sale was void against him as a reversioner. Held, the husband of defendant (1) died leaving his debts unpaid and it was to satisfy the debts secured by mortgages that the defendant (1) sold her moiety of the property ; there was therefore necessity in law and in fact for the sale of the moiety of property. The sale would not be invalid no matter what may have been the purpose to which the defendant (1) applied the balance of Rs. 711-13-10. The purchasers, were not bound to see that the defendant (1) applied to any particular purpose. Further held that the delay on the flimsy ground that the plaintiff was not aware of the sale was inexcusable. (Sir John Edge). MEDAI DALAVOI, THIRUMALAIYAPPA MUDALIAR v. NAINAR TEVAN.

The Hindu Law recognises two sets of religious acts as justifying an alienation by a Hindu widow. One is in connection with the actual obsequies of the deceased, and the periodical performance of the obsequial rites prescribed by the Hindu Religious Law, which are considered as essential for the salvation of the soul of the deceased. The other relates to acts which, although not essential or obligatory, are still pious observances which conduce to the bliss of the deceased's soul. With reference to the first class of acts the powers of the Hindu female who holds the property are wider than in respect of the acts which are simply pious and if performed are meritorious so far as they conduce to the spiritual benefit of the deceased,

In one case if the income of the property or the property itself is not sufficient to cover the expenses she is entitled to sell the whole of it. In the other case she can alienate a small portion of the property for the pious or charitable purpose she may have in view. Where a Hindu widow after performing a pilgrimage to Jagannath gifted a small portion of her husband's estate (in this case a one seventy-fifth) for the observance of bhog (food offerings) to the deity and for the maintenance of the priest and she purported to make the gift for the welfare of her deceased husband's soul and his salvation. Held, that the gift was valid though the widow had ample income from her husband's estate out of which she might have made the gift. 8 M I A. 329 ; 13 M.I.A. 209 ; 8 Mad. 552; 34 Mad. 288 approved. 22 Cal. 506 Dist (Mr. Ameer Ali). Lapse of time does not affect the question except in so far as it might give rise to a presumption of acquiescence or save the alienee from adverse inferences arising from the scanty proof offered. It is not sufficient to establish that there were litigations and expenses must have been incurred. It must be shown that the expenses could not have been met from the income of the estate, that they were reasonable, and what they were. ——Alienation—Widow—Necessity—Proof of—Recitals—Value of—Old alienation—Maintenance of widow.

The onus of proving that an alienation by a Hindu widow is binding on the reversioner is on the alienee. 23 I.A. 57 Ref. Recitals of necessity in the deed of alienation cannot by themselves be proof of its existence. If the alienations were challenged immediately, so that independent evidence would be available, the recitals would deserve but slight consideration. If by effluxion of time, evidence independent of the recital disappears and becomes unavailable a recital of necessity consistent with probability and circumstances, assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside. The recital is clear evidence of representation to the purchaser and, when evidence of actual enquiry by him has become impossible, the recital, coupled with circumstances which justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth is sufficient evidence to support the alienation. Otherwise a title would become weaker as it grows older. In the absence of sufficient current income the maintenance of a widow (after paying off the debts and other expenses is a necessity justifying an alienation by her. The maintenance need not be measured merely by a sufficient sum to support bare existence. The periods at which the properties were sold, the small sums for which they were sold and the disposition of the property, piece by piece, with fair regularity for a period of 16 years, all supported the view that the widow was unable to maintain herself out of the income and the sale was therefore justifiable. A Hindu widow succeeded as heir to her son and made an oral gift of a portion of the property in her possession in favour of the pandas of the temple of Jagannath. On her return she made a formal deed of gift in which after alluding to the oral gift she stated that she had made the gift and shanklap for the salvation of her husband and his family members and for her own salvation. The portion endowed constituted no more than 180 parts of the estate. Held, that the gift was valid having been made with a view to the spiritual benefit of the widow's husband and her sons who were included in the expression "husband's family members." An alienation made by a Hindu widow for the spiritual benefit of the deceased will not be set aside merely because it was not made in connection with a shradh ceremony of the deceased. In the case of an alienation for a purpose regarded as indispensable to welfare of the late husband, e.g., Shradh, funerals, etc , the question will not be what proportion does the property alienated bear to the entire estate but only whether the alienation was a reasonable one and suitable to the position of the family. There may be alienations made by a Hindu widow for the purpose of doing pious acts for the benefit of her late husband which are not in the nature of spiritual necessities; and with regard to such alienations the question of the proportion borne by the property alienated to the value of the entire estate becomes pertinent. When a person claims title under an alienation effected by a Hindu widow in respect of the estate of her husband, the burden lies on him to establish either that there was legal necessity in fact which justified the alienation or that he made proper and bona fide enquiries and did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself as to the existence of such necessity. 35 C. 420; 16 A. 420; 35 C,L.J. 116, Ref. In the application of this primary rule, it is to be borne in mind that recitals in conveyances or mortgages of the existence of legal necessity are not by themselves evidence of the fact and there must ordinarily be some evidence to substantiate the allegations aliunde. 36 A. 187; 37 A 369, Ref. Though lapse of time does not affect the question of onus of proof regarding legal necessity, it may give rise to a presumption of acquiescence or save the alienee from adverse inference arising from the scantiness of the evidence offered on his behalf. To put the matter in another way, when by efflux of time, direct evidence independent of the recital becomes unavailable, a recital of necessity consistent with probability and the circumstances assumes greater importance; it is clear evidence of a representation to the purchaser and when evidence of actual enquiry by him has become impossible, the recital coupled with circumstances which justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, is sufficient evidence to support the transaction. Where there is pressure on the estate, it is not necessary to determine whether the estate might have been kept free from debts by prudent management. 23 C. 766, 189: This is so especially where the lender acted bona fide and enquired into the necessity for the loan. 6 C. 843: 20 C.L.J. 23; 30 C.L.J. 56; 19 C.W.N. 80, Ref. ——Alienation—Widow—Necessity—Proof of—Recitals of—Reversioner joining in alienation—Estoppel.

The mere fact that a conveyance of a portion of her husband's estate is executed jointly by a Hindu widow and the then next reversioner does not by itself create an indefeasible title in favour of the vendor. He must prove legal necessity or such bona fide inquiry as entitles him to protection from a Court of Equity. A mere recital in the deed as to the existence of such necessity by itself, is insufficient. The concurrence of the then next reversioner is a presumption in favour of the validity of the transaction. Where the creditor is not shown to have made a bona fide inquiry, he must prove that there was an actual pressure on the estate or danger to be averted such as a threatened suit on a genuine debt, an outstanding decree or an impending sale which the widow had no funds to meet. Where persons contesting an alienation by a Hindu widow claim not through their father but directly as reversioners to the estate of the last male owner they are not precluded by any rule of estoppel from disputing the validity of the alienation nor are they affected by the circumstance that they had, after the death of their father and before the death of the widow taken by inheritance land transferred by the widow by way of gift to their father. The test to be applied, where an alienation made by a limited owner is impeached, is whether the transaction is fair and proper, lawful and valid, and justified by Hindu Law; necessity is only one of the phases of the test of propriety. The widow has a larger power of disposition for religious or charitable purposes or for purposes which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband than what she possesses for purely worldly purposes. A Hindu widow, daughter or mother, is entitled to alienate a small portion of the estate in her hands for religious purposes. Case law discussed. The income of a widow is an important factor to be determined whether an alienation is for necessity. The widow's real object was to get some ready cash into her hands and the alienees were not ignorant of the real object. Held, the alienation was invalid against the reversioners. The existence of a debt due by the husband's estate on the date of the sale, does not entitle the widow to sell away a portion of the property, if the sale would be imprudent. Actual existence of necessity is not necessary to justify an alienation by a Hindu widow. It is enough if a representation had been made to the purchaser as to the existence of necessity and he had acted honestly after satisfying himself by proper inquiry. Recitals are evidence of the representation and when proof of enquiry has become impossible owing to lapse of time, the recital coupled with the other circumstances would be sufficient to support the alienation. If it has been proved that a sale by a widow having a limited interest, has benefited the estate by the payment of debts which were binding on it, although the amount paid may not amount to the whole of the consideration money received for the property sold, the Court, when it sets aside the sale, will direct payment to the alienee to the extent of the benefit received by the estate, and it must follow that if the consideration money for the sale is found intact at the death of the widow, the estate has benefited to that extent. So that if the reversioner after the widow's death wishes to have the sale by her set aside, he can only succeed if he restores the money. ———Alienation—Widow — Setting aside—Rights of reversioner—Option to avoid.

In the case of an alienation by a limited owner not justified by necessity, the reversioner may treat the alienation which purports to extend beyond the life of the limited owner as a nullity and he may sue for possession at any time within 12 years of the death of the limited owner without first seeking to set aside the transfer in favour of the deft. In other words if he elects to treat the transfer as a nullity after the death of the limited owner he may do so and there is nothing left in such a case to be set aside and he may sue for possession and is entitled to obtain possession. All that is necessary for the reversioner is to exercise his option and he may do so by merely bringing a suit to claim possession. From the moment the reversioner exercises his option there is nothing left in the transferee. There are more ways than one by which a tenancy may determine. The limited owner has no power to grant a tenancy beyond her own life as against the reversioner and once the reversioner elects to treat the interest granted to the tenant as an interest extending only for the life-time of the grantor then in such a case it terminates upon the death of the grantor and there is nothing more to be done to terminate the tenancy. ———Applicability of—Migrating family— Bombay School—Daughter succeeding—Absolute inheritance.

A Hindu residing in a particular province of India is held to be subject to the particular doctrines of Hindu Law recognised in that Province. But this law is not merely a local law. It becomes the personal law, and part of the status of every family which is governed by it; consequently where any such family migrates to another Province governed by another law, it carries its own law with it. A member of such a family is governed by the original personal law of the family, unless it can be shown that the original law has been renounced in favour of the law of the place to which he or his family migrated. Persons who or whose ancestors have emigrated from the Bombay Presidency to the Central Provinces are prima facie subject to the law as expounded in Bombay. According to that law the daughter succeeds to the father in an absolute inheritance. The decisions of the Bombay Courts merely declared the law as it has existed as a custom in the Maharatta country and therefore governed these migrating families: 1 Bom. H.C.R. 180; 1 Bom. ———Applicability — Migrating family—Mithila School—Dayabaga Law.

A Hindu family, residing in a particular province of India, is presumed to be governed by the law of the place where it resides. 20 C. 409. Ref. to. This presumption is rebutted, where the family is shown to have migrated from one province to another. The presumption then arises that the family carried with it the laws and customs as to the succession and family relation prevailing in the Province from which it came. 12 Moo. I.A. 81 ; 29 C. 433, referred to. Thereafter the burden shifts and lies upon those who assert it to prove that the family after migrating has adopted the law and usages of the place to which it has migrated, 31 A. 477 ; 24 M. 650 ; 40 C. 407; 34 B. 559, referred to. Where however it is proved by numerous instances of succession in the family and evidence of the observance of right and ceremonies at marriages, births and deaths which indicates the relinquishment of Mithakshara law and the adoption of the Dayabaga Law in the family, the Court would act upon such evidence and infer that the family had adopted the Dayabaga law. The Hindu law is not merely a local law but is essentially a personal law, an integral factor of the status of every family which is governed by it. In its new domicile, the family may, by the reflex action of manners and customs prevalent in resident families, consciously or unconsciously, modify its own governing rules ; there may thus be an acceptance of a new law not due to sudden change by choice or agreement, but by the gradual evolution of a family usage. When a new family usage has thus grown up in the course of generations possibly with the concurrence or acquiescence of families of the same group, that furnishes the governing law of the family. 29 C. 433 ; 43 I.A. 35 ; 47 I.A. 213, followed. ———Applicability of—Migrating family—Presumption—Adherence to religious and social rules of the place of origin—Effect of—Brahmins and Kayasthas of Bengal—Dayabhaga Law.

A Hindu family residing in a particular Province of India is presumed to be governed by the law of the place where it resides but where a Hindu family, is shown to have migrated from one place to another the presumption is that it carries with it the laws and customs as to succession and family relation prevailing in the province from which it came. This presumption, however, is rebuttable by evidence that the family has adopted the law and usages of the place to which it has migrated. The Brahmins and Kayasthas of Bengal migrated from Kanauj and originally brought with them the Mithila law ; it was after their settlement in this province that the Dayabhaga school of Hindu Law was founded by Jimutvahana about the 14th century and that is the law which now governs the Hindu population of Bengal even though they may have originally migrated from North Behar. Instances of succession consistent with the Mitakshara and inconsistent with the Dayabhaga Law or evidence that the family had conformed to religious and social rites and usages consistent with the Mitakshara and inconsistent with the Dayabhaga law may shift the burden. A Hindu family which has migrated into Bengal ——Applicability—Community—Non-Hindu in origin—Subsequent adoption of Hinduism—Presumption — Extent of adoption—Basi Chowrasi Gaddidars—Marriage —Adoption—Impartibility.

In dealing with the custom of an entire community it is of more importance to have regard to the history of the main body than to the history of the less important branches. The Basi Chowrasi Gaddidars are a recognised community. Probably the community was non-Hindu in orgin ; but the members have all now accepted Hinduism to such a degree as to raise a presumption that the community has assimilated the law of adoption and so far as the Lachmipur Gaddi is concerned there is no custom in it to the contrary. It is only in the case of the Tundi, Gudan Jharia and Palganj gaddis that the tradition exists that the holders of the Kharagdhiha gaddis were orginally Rajputs. The indication therefore, is that as a group these gaddidars were originally indigenous and at some time unknown accepted Hinduism. The estates of these gaddidars are impartible and descend to the eldest son ; but this does not show that they are non-Hindus. The rule against marrying within the same gotra is not an universal rule among Hindus but is recognised by the Basi Chowrasi Gaddidars inasmuch as they do not marry within certain groups. ———Debts—Antecedent debts—Mortgage at a time when there was no son in the joint family.

Where a person mortgaged his property before the birth of a son and subsequently after the birth of such son he again mortgaged it in order to discharge the previous mortgage held that the prior mortgage constituted an antecedent debt 39. A. 437 ; 44 A. 382 referred to. (Daniels, J.) TIRLOK SAITHWAR v. LALSA SAITHWAR. 1923 A. 488 (2).

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Money required for satisfying decree for pre-emption—If one.

A pre-emption decree merely gives an option of acquiring certain property at a certain price. The decree-holder is under no obligation to acquire the property unless he chooses: money required for such a purpose is not an antecedent debt. Per Walsh, J.—There must be a real dissociation in fact to give effect to the doctrine of antecedenoy. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) CHATUR BHUJ v. GOBIND RAM. 4 U.P.L.R. (A) 43 = 1923 All. 218.

——Debts—Antecedent debts.

The doctrine of antecedent debt, resting as it does on the theory of pious obligation, is only intended for the protection of third parties who may have acquired rights in good faith in the family property, and if a vendee cannot invoke it for validating a sale effected in lieu of an invalid antecedent mortgage in his own favour, it is still less open to a creditor, whose mortgage has been declared to be invalid to recover the debt, represented by that mortgage, while the mortgagor is alive, from the shares of his sons, who have been exempted from liability out of the very property, the mortgage of which has been declared to be unenforceable. The debt for the payment of which this liability is sought to be enforced is in no sense an antecedent debt. It is the very debt for the repayment of which the mortgage was made; and if the doctrine of pious obligation cannot be invoked to support the mortgage, it can hardly be invoked during the father's lifetime to enforce the liability of the family property other than the interest of the debtor for its repayment. (Stuart and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.) KISHAN SINGH v. CHEJJU SINGH. 45 A. 90 = 1923 All. 206.

——Debts—Antecedent debts.

Prior mortgage debts forming consideration of the mortgage in suit are not antecedent debts so as to bind the sons, but an oral debt incurred by a co-parcener of the grandfather which was binding on the grandfather binds the grandson as an antecedent debt. (Piggott and Sulaiman, JJ.) RAM RATAN MISIR v. KAPIL DEO SINGH. 1923 All. 20.

HINDU LAW—Debts—Antecedent debts.

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Mortgage—Necessity.

Where the evidence shows that a mortgage executed by a Hindu father was in order to discharge certain prior mortgages and the prior mortgages had themselves been incurred for legal necessity, then the mortgage can be enforced against the whole family property including the interest of the son. The prohibition in Sahu Ramachandra v. Bhup Singh. 39 A. 497 (P.C.) does not apply to such a case. (Rafique and Piggott, JJ.) RANJIT SINGH v. GANGA SAHAI. L.R. 3 A. 328 = 1923 All. 291.

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Prior mortgage—Discharge of—Son not born at the time—Rights of.

A prior mortgage executed by a Hindu father is an "antecedent debt" to discharge which he could alienate the family property. If the son was not born at the date of the prior mortgage he could not question the necessity for the same, when seeking to set aside the alienation. 39 A. 437 (P.C.) = 33 A. 283 Ref. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) SURAJ PRASAD v. MAKHAN LAL. 20 A.L.J. 236 = 1922 All. 51.

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Pro-note in contemplation of subsequent mortgage—Personal covenant by father in mortgage.

Neither a debt contracted by a Hindu father on a promissory note which recited that the money was to form part of a mortgage of family property to be executed later on, nor money borrowed by him on a mortgage of family property containing a covenant for personal liability, can be deemed an antecedent debt inasmuch as the money was not borrowed wholly apart from the security of family property, and irrespective of the credit which the borrower obtained by reason of the ownership of family assets. (Mears, C.J. and Banerji, J.) RAM SARUP v BHARAT SINGH. 64 I.C. 763 = 19 A.L J. 744.

—— Debts—Antecedent debts—After born son.

A deed executed by a Hindu father long before the birth of a son, is valid and a deed executed in lieu of that deed must be considered to be for an antecedent debt. (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.) GIRDHARI LAL v GOBINDRAM. 68 I.C. 28 = 19 A.L.J. 456.

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Father—Pious obligation—Grandson's liability.

An obligation incurred by the father of a Mitakshara joint family which would be binding upon his sons must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit, and secondly, it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. If a Hindu father borrows money on the security of the joint estate and there is nothing to show that the money was advanced to him on personal credit, the debt is not an antecedent debt binding on the sons. The doctrine of pious obligation comes into operation only against the sons, or in case of their death, against the grandsons. The doctrine is based on spiritual considerations apart from the ownership of the property. Held, (1) that a prior mortgage by the father did not constitute an antecedent debt within the decision in 39 All. 437. (P.C.); and (2) that there was no pious obligation on the grandsons in the lifetime of their respective fathers to pay off the debts of their grandfather. (Rafique and Lindsay, JJ.) RAM SINGH v. CHETRAM.

In a joint family an antecedent debt incurred by a brother who is the Manager of the family is not binding on other brothers unless it be for legal necessity. There is no pious duty imposed on brothers and nephews to pay off debts of brothers and uncles. (Tudball. J.) NIRBAHAY LAL v. KALLAN. 46 I.C. 516.

——Debts—Antecedent debts—Immoral—Liability of son.

Antecedent debts tainted with immorality would not make the son liable in respect of a mortgage executed for the discharge of such debts. A mortgage executed in lieu of a money decree obtained against the father in respect of sums not accounted for by him, is enforceable as an antecedent debt binding on the sons and grandsons of the mortgagor. The object of the alienation by way of mortgagee having been to pay off the antecedent debts incurred by the father prior to the mortgage, the whole debt was antecedent under Hindu Law, though the original debt was due to the mortgagee himself. There is nothing in the judgment in I.L.R. 39 All. 437 (P.C.), which supports the contention that the antecedent debt must not be due to the alienee. If the money is borrowed on the security of a mortgage to pay off the antecedent debts it would be an alienation in respect of the antecedent debts. (Shah and Hayward, JJ.) An alienation by the father of a Hindu joint family is binding on the sons under two circumstances (1) where the alienation is for purposes of family necessity, (2) where it is for discharging an antecedent debt incurred by the father. HINDU LAW—Debts—Antecedent debts.

————Debts—Antecedent debts—Enforceable against the son during father's lifetime — Immoral or illegal purposes—Onus.

The pious obligation of a Mitakshara son to pay his father's debts is not during his father's lifetime, a ground for giving effect as against the son, to a mortgage of ancestral joint family property executed by the father to secure a debt which is neither antecedent nor justified by legal necessity. A loan made to the father on the occasion of such a mortgage is not an "antecedent" debt and if the loan is not justified by the legal necessity the mortgage is to that extent inoperative as against the son's share. 39 All. 437, P.C. and 9 N.L.R. 74, Ref. If in a suit to enforce such a mortgage the son is impleaded as a party he can show that any antecedent debt forming part of the consideration is tainted with immorality; but it is not incumbent on him to go further and prove that when the debt was contracted, the creditor was aware or might have been aware of the immoral purpose for which the money was taken. 28 All. 508, Foll. (Drake Brockman, J.C.) DILLI SINGH v. BINA. 44 I.C. 806 = 14 N.L.R. 41.

————Debts—Antecedent debts—Test of.

The true test seems to be whether the payment and the transfer are in reality a single transaction or not. Religious duty of son to pay off debt must be distinguished from liability of son to respect an alienation by the father. (Drake-Brockman, J.C.) HIRA RAU v. UDHI RAU. 19 I.C. 861 = 9 N.L.R. 74.

————Debts—Antecedent debts—Mortgage.

The definition of an antecedent debt as one "incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from joint family property" is to be regarded as one to be construed in the light of the particular facts before a Court and as not excluding from the category of antecedent debt money borrowed on a hypothecation bond since the personal liability of debts so secured continues to exist independently of the hypothecation. A usufructuary mortgagor is not as such personally liable to pay the loan. It is open to the alienee to invoke the antecedency of the father's debts to support an alienation as against the son even during the father's life-time. 39 A. 437; 23 O.C. 211, Ref. ————Debts— Antecedent debts— Alienation by father—Pro-notes.

Where a mortgage was taken by the creditor in lieu of pro-notes executed by the father. Held, the effect of the novation of the contract was practically to render the earlier bonds unenforceable. The consideration of the mortgage is therefore a good consideration binding on the sons who were charged under the Hindu Law with the responsibility of paying the debts due by their father who died during the pendency of the suit on the mortgage. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.C.) RAM SINGH v. MT. RAGHUBANSA. 26 O.C. 201 = 9 O. & A.L.R. 29 = 1923 Oudh 3.

HINDU LAW—Debts—Antecedent debts.

————Debts — Antecedent debts— Personal liability under mortgage—Alienation by father.

To justify an alienation of joint family property by a father on the ground of antecedent debt, there must be not only antecedency in time but also true dissociation in fact. In the absence of proof of such a debt, the sons are not precluded from impeaching the alienation. The personal liability of a Hindu father executing a usufructuary mortgage, in case of dispossession of the mortgagee, does not constitute debt which can be treated as antecedent, 39 A. 437; 31 A. 176; 21 O.C. 200; 23 O.C. 204, Ref. ————Debts—Antecedent debts — Essentials.

An antecedent debt must not only be prior in time but must be quite separate from the mortgage in question. If a person borrows money on a mortgage, a little more than a fortnight after a prior mortgage, there is no separation so as to render the latter an antecedent debt. (Daniels, A.J.C.) UMRAO SINGH v. GAYA PRASAD. 60 I.C. 647 = 23 O.C. 374.

————Debts—Antecedent debts—Pious obligation of the sons—Divided sons—Liability of.

Where an earlier bond carried a personal liability to repay the amount borrowed and the amount secured by a subsequent deed was credited towards the payment of earlier deed, held, since the entire amount of the earlier deed was borrowed to repay money debts not secured by joint family property was an antecedent debt. The question of antecedent debts becomes material only when legal necessity cannot be established. The pious obligation of a son or a grandson to pay off his ancestral debts does not depend on whether the two were joint or separate in estate because the doctrine is found on religious considerations to which the question of separation is entirely irrelevant. Where the debt is one which the father himself was under a pious obligation to pay, a subsequent debt incurred to pay that debt is an antecedent debt binding on his sons in turn. Joint family property may be sold or charged by father to discharge an antecedent debt; i.e., a debt incurred not only prior to the date of the sale or charge but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be afforded by it. After joint family property is thus sold or mortgaged, no question as to whether the antecedent debt was incurred for legal necessity or other purposes binding upon the sons or whether the transaction entered into by the father is enforceable against the sons during his lifetime arises, 39 All. 437, (P.C.) Where defendant's father as manager of plaintiff's estate during his minority and while it was under Court of Wards failed to account. Held, liability imposed by the Court upon the father to indemnify the person with whose property he had improperly interfered creates a debt for which the ancestral property in the hands of the son might justly be held liable. Admittedly the father was not criminally prosecuted and the suit was one for accounts which he had failed to deliver. Every breach of civil liability does not necessarily involve a mortal turpitude, and it has not been shown that the debt in question was criminal in law for the discharge of which the son is not liable. A debt contracted by a Hindu father for an immoral purpose is not binding on the son, even though the property is acquired by the father himself. Isolated acts of immorality or even general immorality are not enough to prove that a debt for immoral purpose was incurred, but there must be a clear connection between the immoral life and the debts contracted. It is sufficient to prove that the borrower was at the time living a licentious life, beyond his means, and that he was without any business or occupation on which the money might legitimately be spent. To avoid liability for a debt of his father the son has to establish a direct connection between the debt and the alleged illegal or immoral purpose. Direct evidence of the application of a debt for a specific immoral purpose is not always possible to obtain and it will be sufficient if the evidence is such that the Court could infer that the debt must have been incurred for immoral purpose. 15 Cal. 717; 14 Bom. 320; 36 Bom. 68. ———Debts—Liability for—Father's debt.

By the Mitakshara Law according to 44 Cal. 524, a judgment against the father of the family cannot be executed against the whole of the Mitakshara property if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against "the father alone". These words could not be clearer and they are absolutely comprehensive. There are no limitations, qualifications or reservations to the effect that the debt must be incurred by the father representing the estate or purporting to be for the benefit of the estate or in some capacity other than his personal capacity. The words in 44 Cal. 524 are "In every other event it is open to execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone" and there is nothing to qualify the words "the father alone." The decision in 44 Cal. 524 is to the effect that, once a simple money decree is passed against the father and manager of a joint Hindu family, that simple money decree can be executed by the execution creditor against the whole of the estate, and will operate against the interests of the sons, unless the debt has been incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. The decision in 15 A.L. J.R. 487 lays down an absolutely different proposition that joint family property cannot be transferred by an act of volition on the part of the manager, except with the consent of other co-parceners or for legal necessity or in payment of antecedent debts, and that the doctrine of the pious duty of a Hindu son to satisfy his father's debts can have no operation to validate such a transfer, so long at any rate as the father is alive. But in order to apply the principle of the second decision, there must be a transfer by the volition of the manager. (Stuart, J.) SHAMBU DIYAL SINGH v. ISWAR SARAN. 1923 All. 306.

benefit of the estate. The representation of the manager is not sufficient. The lender is not bound to see to the application of the money but if he does to it the question of enquiry becomes immaterial. The lender's act will be mala fide where it is shown that he must have known that the transaction was bound to involve the family in ruin and that the borrower was acting in his own interest rather than in the interest of the family. Where the karta exercises his discretion bona fide and for the benefit of the estate it should not be narrowly scrutinized by the Court. The onus of proof is on the alienee to prove that the charge created by the karta was for justifying necessity or for the benefit of the family. ———Debts—Necessity—Loan to save family business.

Where the manager borrows money to save the family property and to remove the fear of disturbance likely to be caused in the family business, the existence of necessity may be ———Debts—Necessity— Interest— Exorbitant rate—Debt by Hindu father on credit of family property.

In case of debts contracted by a Hindu father on the credit of the family property Courts have a discretion to interfere if the interest charged is excessive or exorbitant. The appellate Court will be slow to interfere where it can be shown that such discretion has been exercised in a reasonable manner. (Lindsay, J.C.) DARGAHI v. CHAUDHURI RAJESHWARI PERSHAD. 48 I.C. 783= 21 O.C. 265.

——Debts — Necessity — Interest — High rate.

A creditor who advances money to a Hindu widow for legal necessity at a high rate of interest is not entitled to recover interest at that rate, unless he explains why that rate was fixed. In such cases the creditor should be allowed a reasonable rate of interest. (Lindsay, J.C.) DWARAKA PRASAD v. PRITHI PAL SINGH. 47 I.C. 106=5 O.L.J. 271.

———Debts—Necessity—Interest.

Debt carrying exessive interest does not bind the son so far as an onerous rate of interest is concerned unless it is justified by the state of the family, the burden of proving which lies on mortgagee even as deft, and if a decree is obtained against father on the footing of such interest, sons must be relieved from liability under the decree if they pay reasonable interest. (Stuart and Kanhaiya Lal, A.J.Cs.) SADHO CHARAN PRASAD v. RAM RATAN. 40 I.C. 369=4 O.L.J. 337.

———Debts— Necessity — Proof — Family necessity.

There is no presumption that debts incurred by members of a joint Hindu family were incurred for family necessity; the fact must be proved by the creditor although it may be difficult for him to adduce evidence on the point owing to a lapse of time. In a case of a transfer of family property by some members there is no presumption that the remaining members consented to the transfer. (Stuart, A.J.C.) ———Debts — Necessity —Proof — Trading family.

———Debts—Necessity—Mortgage by father —Necessity not proved—Decree for sale—Personal decree—Liability of surviving members.

Where property of a joint family is mortgaged by the father and there is no allegation of legal necessity it is incumbent on the mortgagee to prove that the sons and grandsons of the original mortgagor were liable to discharge the debt and that the property in their hands is liable to be sold. The mortgagee cannot get a mortgage decree unless he proves that the money was borrowed for purposes which are binding on the joint family. (Lindsay, J. C.) ———Debts—Necessity—Marriage expenses —Twice-born.

Marriage is obligatory on Hindus who do not desire to adopt the life of a perpetual Brahmachari or Sanyasi and so the debts reasonably incurred for the marriage of a twice-born Hindu are binding on the joint family. (Kanhaiya Lal, A.J.C.) GHAZAFFAR HUSSAIN v. MAHABIR PRASAD. 17 I.C. 309.

———Debts—Necessity—Borrowing by manager—Rights of creditor—Interest—Enforceability against family.

When a contract of loan entered into by a head member or karta of a joint Hindu family is sought to be enforced against the other members on the ground of necessity, it must be shown not only that there was a necessity to borrow the principal sum but that the rate of interest agreed upon was also a necessity; in other words, that it was impossible for the karta or the head member to obtain a loan for family necessity except at the rate of interest agreed upon. The creditor in such a case has not only to show that there was a family necessity so as to bind the members of that family on behalf of the parties to the contract with respect to the loan advanced but that the rate of interest was the market or commercial rate. He will not be entitled to enforce a higher rate of interest against the other members and to make the joint family properties liable for interest higher than the current market rate of interest. Moreover where the necessity arises from the pressure of a judgment-debt the person dealing with the manager of a joint Hindu family he is entitled to treat the judgment as prima facie proof of necessity, and he is under no obligation to go behind the judgment in order to enquire whether the debt covered by the decree was for legal and binding necessity of the family. HINDU LAW—Debts—Son's Liability.

———Debts— Son's liability — Necessity— Antecedent debt— Pious obligation—Onus of proof.

Under the law of the Mitakshara, the father in his capacity of manager and head of the family has power to affect or dispose of joint family property for estate or family necessity, but otherwise he has no power of sale or mortgage except for an antecedent debt. A borrowing on the occasion of a mortgage or in consideration of a sale is not such an antecedent debt. The exception only applies to the case where the father's debt has been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property. To validate a mortgage for an antecedent debt not only antecedency in time but real dissociation in fact is required. The exception in this respect has been invoked for the protection of third parties who have taken their title for onerous consideration, and in good faith and should not be extended so as to cover a breach of trust by father. 31 All. 176, Appr.; 29 Mad. 200 ; 34 Cal. 184, Disappr. The pious obligation of the sons and grandsons under the Mitakshara law, to discharge their father's and grandfather's debts does not attach while the father and grandfather are alive and the latter cannot dispose of their shares in the joint family property on that ground. ———Debts—Son's liability—Decree against father — Right, title and interest—Sale of — Purchaser's right — Mitakshara joint family.

Under the Mitakshara Law a judgment against the father alone can always be executed against the whole joint family property except where the debt in respect of which the judgment was obtained was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. The words "right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor (father)" in the sale certificate do not necessarily import that, when the father is the judgment-debtor, nothing but his share of the joint family property is sold. There is no reason why the execution creditor should be deprived of his undoubted rights by such a narrow construction. In cases of this kind the substance and not the technicalities of the transaction should be regarded. Having regard to the conduct of the sons in the case and to the price paid by the execution creditor, who purchased the property, it was held that the intention was to sell the whole property including the interest of the sons. 14 I.A. 77 ; 17. ———Debts—Son's liability—Mortgage invalid—Pious obligation to pay debt.

The liability of a son or grandson to pay the debt of his ancestor, which is not tainted with immorality or was not taken for illegal purposes, is not enforceable so long as the original debtor is alive and is capable of paying his debts. During the lifetime of the father apart from any question of family benefit or necessity the liability of a son to pay a debt due by his father is only contingent. The existence of that liability contingent or vested, has been utilised to build up the doctrine of antecedent debt to validate a mortgage or sale effected by the father to pay such debt ; and in many cases, a creditor has been allowed to recover a debt due by the father from the entire family property, if not tainted with immorality, as if the liability were concurrent. 44 A. 126 : 39 A. 237, Ref. If the attempt to enforce a mortgage on the theory of pious obligation fails, the right to attach the family property during the life time of the father on the strength of that pious obligation can be still less recognised because if no pious obligation exists, it must be as insufficient to support the one as to support the other. The sale proceeds, however, did not fully satisfy the mortgage, and for the remaining sum the decree-holder applied for a personal decree under O. 34, r. 6, of the C. P. Code. The decree was passed against the father alone, although the personal remedy under the first of the two mortgages had become time-barred. The father then died and the decree-holder sought to attach and to bring to sale the property of the joint family which had come to the son by survivorship. Held, that the application had been rightly dismissed as the personal decree passed against the father to which the son was no party was made up in part of the time-

If in regard to an admitted or proved existing debt of their fathers the sons are only entitled to plead that it was illegal or immoral, it must be admitted that they are also entitled to plead that there was no debt of their fathers existing at the time at all, and there is no difference between that and the plea that there was no debt of their father existing at the time which was of such a nature as to justify an alienation of their shares for its satisfaction. ———Debts—Son's liability—Extent of.

It is the primary duty of a Hindu father to pay debts incurred by him not for any family, but for his own purposes and the pious duty of a son if it arises at all only arises if the father's share or his self-acquisitions are insufficient to meet the debts. Where the sons bring a suit for a declaration that a foreclosure decree passed against their father is not binding on them on the ground they were not made parties to the foreclosure suit and it is not shown that the mortgage debt was either illegal or immoral, the sons' suit is not sustainable. The mere fact that in the foreclosure suit the father was not described as the manager of the joint family did not make the decree any the less binding on his sons, in the absence of proof that the father acted in a way prejudicial to the interests of the family. ———Debts—Son's liability—Pious obligation.

Under the Hindu Law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of the sons for the debts of the father unless the debts are taken for illegal or immoral purposes. There is a pious obligation on the sons to pay such debts. The obligation is only contingent during the father's lifetime, the father may discharge the same in his lifetime or there may be ample personal estate of the father available out of which the debts might be discharged or no joint family property left from which their satisfaction might be possible. It makes no difference in principle whether the property passed out by foreclosure or sale. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.C.) BINDESHARI SINGH v. AUDESH PRASAD SINGH. 25 O.C. 16=1922 Oudh 85.

———Debts—Son's liability — Mortgage — Personal remedy.

In the absence of proof of necessity the sons of a Hindu are not liable for a mortgage debt contracted by their father. The remedy of the creditor on the basis of the pious obligation of the sons is not co-extensive with his remedy on a binding security. Where the sons are sought to be made liable on the personal obligation contained in the mortgage executed by their father, the suit must be brought within six years from the due date under the bond. 31 A. 176, Foll; 39 A. 437, Ref. The question as to the pious obligation of the son to pay a debt does not depend upon whether the son was separate or joint with the father. That question is based on religious considerations. Where the debts incurred by a Hindu father were not incurred for legal and justifying necessities of the joint family or for the benefits of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 (his sons) and it is also not found that the debts were incurred for immoral purposes, the minor sons of the father are bound to satisfy their father's debt on the theory of the pious obligation of the sons to pay their father's debt. The Court should accordingly make a decree against the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and limit their liability to the extent of the co-parcenary property of the joint family. ——Debts—Son's liability—Ancestral or self-acquired property.

The onus or proof of immorality or illegality as affecting the debt incurred by the father is upon the sons, for after the death of their father their liability to pay the father's debt arises under the express text of the Mitakshara on the ground of their pious obligation to save their fathers from the region of torment or hell. The sons, are, therefore, bound to pay the decree debt of their father under the Hindu Law. Their liability is a personal one, and it is not barred up to six years from the date of the decree. The rule of Hindu Law is that where a son or a guardian takes ancestral property by survivorship, he is bound to pay out of such property all debts of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes including the judgment-debtor. ——Gift—Absolute estate—Female donee—Restriction on alienation.

A Hindu father made a gift to his daughter in these terms: "These properties having been gifted to and delivered possession of to you, yourself and your Santhathikal Puthra Paramparayami may enjoy the same without creating any incumbrance, sale, etc." Held, that the deed conveyed an absolute estate and that the words were only words of limitation and not of purchase. 10 M.L.T. 203, Foll. The restriction against alienation was a repugnant condition and therefore invalid. (Abdur Rahim and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ.) ——Gift—Construction—Bequest to some members of a joint family.

Where the devisees or donees are only some of the members of a joint Hindu family and there is a clear intention to exclude the remaining members and to confer on the devisees or donees interests to be held, separate from any property which the joint family, might happen to possess, there is no ground for assuming that the devisees or donees were intended to hold the property as co-parceners in the sense of the Hindu Law. (Chamier and Piggott, JJ.) PRABHU DYAL v. HARICHARAN. 26 I.C. 689.

——Gift — Construction — Will — Donee named as adoptee—Gift to donee as a persona designata—Gift not conditional on adoption.

Where there is absolutely nothing in the will to show that the fact of the adoption of the plaintiff was the motive or reason for the gift, in the absence of anything of the kind, interpreting the language of the gift in its ordinary meaning, the Court must treat it as a gift to donee as a persona designata and hold the gift as valid. The distinction between what is description only and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest may often be very fine but it is a distinction which must be drawn from a consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances. ——— Gift — Construction — Self-acquired property.

Under the Mitakshara Law, where gifts are made by a father to several sons, whether they are made inter vivos or by will, as a substitute for the partition of the property among them, there is no reason to suppose that the father intended to favour any one son more than any other. The natural supposition is that the sons are intended to take their shares as they would take them on partition after the father's death, that is, as an ancestral property. ——— Gift—Construction—Bequest to adopted son—Persona designata.

Where a Hindu widow took a boy in adoption and made a will mentioning the fact of adoption and also made a bequest to the adopted son and recited that she made the will with a view to remove subsequent disputes arising in connection with the management of the family property. It was held that the validity of the adoption was not a condition precedent to the bequest; but the words "adopted son" were only descriptive and in spite of them invalidity of the adoption the devisee could take under the will. ———Gift—Construction--Defeasance clause—Effect of—Transferee from donee—Position of.

A clause in a deed of gift that the donor was to become entitled to the properties gifted on the happening of a specified contingency is not invalid or opposed to Hindu Law. A Hindu who had been sentenced to transportation for life made a gift of his properties to a relation of his subject to a condition that the donee should hand over the properties to the donor in case he returned to his native village after the termination of his sentence. The donee alienated the properties gifted to strangers who had notice of the terms of the gift. The donor subsequently returned and sued for possession. Held, that he was entitled to recover the properties from the alienees who could not be said to be bona fide purchasers. ———Gift—Construction—Interpretation of "Santhathi paramparaya"—Son taking as a gift—Character of property.

The words "Santhathi paramparaya" give clear indication of the fact that the annuity created was intended to descend to all heirs of the grantee and not to lineal heirs merely. A son taking an estate from his father as a gift is not free from liability to which he would have been subject had he taken the same as an heir and son (Per Seshagiri Iyer.) There is no change in the character of the property if a person is entitled as an heir but instead of taking it one takes it under a will. This principle is applicable in case of inter vivos transfers. (Wallis, O C.J. and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.) RAJARAJESWARA DORAI v. V. SUNDARAPANDIYASWAMI. 27 I.C 283=27 M.L J. 694.

———Gift—Widow—Gift of whole estate to daughter on marriage—Effect—Death of daughter.

Where a widow at the time of her daughter's marriage makes a gift of her whole estate, it amounts in law to an acceleration of the daughters' estate. The fact that it purported to be a gift on marriage does not affect the question. Where the daughter dies before the mother, the latter does not succeed and the cause of action for the next reversioner begins to run from that date and when he allows possession to remain with another for more than 12 years, his rights are barred. ———Gift—Widow—Consent of nearest reversioner who is insolvent—Effect.

A gift by a Hindu widow of the whole estate with the consent of the nearest reversioner who happened to be an insolvent is not a surrender of the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner and can be supported only if necessity is proved. If the Hindu Law theory is based on the notion that there is first a surrender to the nearest reversioner and an immediate conveyance by him, then as soon as the estate vests in him, it enures to the benefit of the Receiver in insolvency and hence cannot afterwards be conveyed to another (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) HARIHAR PRASAD v. UDAI NATH SAH. 45 A. 260=21 A.L.J. 77= ———Gift—Widow—Alienation—Consen of reversioners—Presumption as to validity.

The consent of the whole body of next reversioners to a gift by a Hindu female owner for life is as presumptive evidence of that gift having been made for purposes or in circumstances which would validate it after the donor's death, in the way in which such consent was held in 42 Mad. 523 (P.C.) to be presumptive evidence of the legal necessity for an alienation for consideration. The consent of the people interested in quarrelling with an alienation would be equally strong proof of its being justifiable whether it was a gift or a sale or a mortgage. The donee gets an absolute estate, though the consenting reversioners are themselves life-tenants. (Batten, J. C. and Hallifax, A.J.C.) MT. KUSHI BAI v. MANRAKHAN. 1923 Nag. 265.

———Gift—Widow—Consent of reversioner—Necessity—Presumption.

The doctrine, that consent of a reversioner to a widow's alienation raises a presumption that the transaction is a proper one and for valid necessity, is not applicable in case of gift by a widow. The Privy Council affirmed the judgment of the Punjab Chief Court holding that the estate of Kunjpara created by a sanad from the Muhammadan ruler in 1748 as a hereditary jagir, was an impartible Raj which had thencefourth descended under a family custom by the rule of primogeniture, at variance with the ordinary Muhammadan Law. The custom also applied to acquisitions made by the holders of the estate after 1849, when the Government withdrew from the Chiefs of Kunjpara the Civil and Criminal Powers they had hitherto exercised. Held with reference to the Zemindari of Karvetnagar that during the period, the Polygar was semi-independent under the Nawab, a restraint on alienation of the whole or part of the Raj without the permission of the overlord was under the very circumstances of the tenure necessary, (2) that however, as soon as the military tenure under which the properties were held, was put an end to and the British Government granted the lands under a quite different tenure with express powers of alienation and after imposing a liability on the lands to be attached and sold in execution, the restraint on alienation came to an end. Per Napier, J.:—By the sanad the Government created a new estate with the incident of alienability for the benefit of the Zemindar and the fact that the similar language is found in the sanad of other Zemindaries on whose alienation there is no such restraint under the prior Government does not affect the question. Moreover where a supposed custom has followed the ordinary law as laid down by the Courts, though wrongly assumed to be the ordinary law, such custom, as it did not modify the law as generally understood and had not independently the force of law, cannot be recognised as valid custom having the force of law. The principles applicable to the determination of the question whether an estate is partible or impartible are these: (1) The absence of a sanad under Madras Regulation (XXV of 1802) does not affect the title to the land. 1 I.A. 282, 306, Ref. (2) The acceptance of a sanad is common form under Regulation (XXV of 1802) does not, of itself, avail to alter the succession to a hereditary estate. 32 I.A. 261. (3) Unless there can be an existing estate with other incidents which a sanad in common form can operate to confirm such a sanad will confirm or confer on the grantee an estate descendible according to the ordinary rules of inheritance under the Hindu Law. 7 I. A. 38. (4) To establish that any estate is descendible otherwise than in accordance with the ordinary rules of Hindu Law, it must be proved either that it is from its nature impartible and descendible to a single heir or that it is so impartible and descendible by virtue of a special family custom. 6 M.I.A. 164, Ref.; and (5) The nature of the estate and the existence or otherwise of a special family custom are questions of fact to be determined on the evidence available in each case. 17 I.A. 134, Ref. ——Impartible estate — Maintenance — Rights of junior members.

Apart from custom and from certain near relationships to the holder, the junior members of the family of a Zemindar entitled to an impartible Zemindari have no right to maintenance out of it, There is no invariable custom by which any member of the family beyond the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right. Where the plaintiff, the son of the paternal uncle of the holder of a Zemindari brought a suit for maintenance, it was held by the Judicial Committee that the issue which should have been tried was whether according to the custom among Uriya Zemindars or the custom of the family, the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance out of the income of the Zemindari ; the burden of proving the custom entitling him to maintenance should have been put upon the plaintiff and not upon the defendants to prove the custom negativing the ordinary law. ———Impartible estate—Succession—Primogeniture—Conditions of its recognition—Acceptance by the head of the family of a Government sanad cannot destroy custom—Impartible estates—Origin.

A custom of primogeniture, whereby women are excluded from inheritance and the male relative in the eldest line of male descent from the last holder or his father or grandfather succeeds, if observed and acted upon for a long time, becomes the law of the family regulating the succession to the family estate ; and the ordinary Hindu Law does not apply. Such a custom may survive the primitive condition of things out of which it originally sprang ; and the head of the family for the time being, cannot by accepting a Government Sanad containing clauses inconsistent with the custom, destroy it or render it inoperative. A family may agree, expressly or impliedly, to continue to observe a custom necessitated by the condition of things existing in primitive times, after that condition had completely altered ; and in such a case, the principle embodied in the expression cessat ratio cessat lex does not apply. One of the ways in which impartible estates may originate is by independent chiefs or feudatories exercising almost autocratic powers being gradually in the course of time reduced by a paramount power to the position of ordinary Zemindars. They may also owe their origin to family arrangements followed up in practice for many generations, whereby it was originally agreed that the family property should be impartible and be held and managed for the benefit of the whole family by a single member at a time in a certain order of succession the other members being entitled to maintenance only, without any power of interference with the management. But a subject has no right to impose upon lands or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent applicable to his case. Villages transferred by the Government in exchange for villages included in the talukdari Sanad in Oudh must be treated as talukdari villages and where a house is granted by Government to a Talukdar for his use as such, the right to possession of it would on his death pass to his successor in the Talukdari Estate and not to his heirs under the personal law. In cases of impartible estates the rules of ordinary Hindu Law of succession apply, in the absence of a special custom, subject to such modifications as are inherent in the impartible character of the estate. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Acquisition.

Joint family—Acquisition.

———Joint family—Acquisition—Property acquired by disposal of ancestral property—Joint family property—Gift of, invalid.

The widow of A, who had been adopted into another family, made an absolute transfer of properties which A inherited from his adoptive father in favour of B, C and D, the surviving natural brothers of A in consideration of benefits received from the latter's ancestral funds, which was challenged as beyond her competence as a Hindu widow. D conveyed some of the properties which he thus got from A and others which he subsequently bought to his concubines and to a daughter by one of them. After D's death D's son R with whom D lived jointly and R's son claimed these properties as joint family properties which D had no authority to alienate. Held, (without deciding whether the alienation by A's widow was valid or not and whether A's property which D got was his ancestral or self-acquired property, but assuming that it was D's self-acquired property) that the evidence showed such blending of this property of D, in which R and his sons as they were born became co-parceners as to make it joint property. As all the properties which were the subject-matter of the deeds of gift were joint properties of D, they did not operate even on the one-sixth share which D might have got by partition of the estate with his co-parceners since D had no separate sixth share and the whole property accrued on his death to surviving members of the family. 40 All. 159, Foll. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Alienation.

———Joint family—Alienation—Necessity—Burden of proof—Father setting aside after born son—Rights of.

The principle that where property has passed out of a joint Hindu family, the burden lies on the plaintiff (son) to prove that the transfer was made for an immoral purpose by the manager of the family applies only where the property has passed out of the family by foreclosure or sale in execution of a decree or where such a decree has been passed and new rights have come into existence. Where there has been a transfer for cash down and the son contests the legality of the sale the onus lies on the vendee to prove the validity of the consideration. Where a Hindu father has alienated ancestral property and where a son who was in existence at the time of the alienation brings a suit to set it aside and before the suit is decided another son is born, such son also acquires a right to set aside the sale. 19 A.L.J. 978, Foll. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Ancestral property.

———Joint family—Ancestral property—Inherited from mother—Joint tenancy—Tenancy-in-common.

A joint tenancy is created where property is inherited by unobstructed succession called rikhta. In such a case the heirs take the property as co-parceners. Absolute property of the mother devolves on the sons not as joint tenants but as tenants-in-common. A tenancy in-common is created where property is inherited by obstructed succession. In this case the idea of inheritance and the idea of partition go together; one is a necessary complement of the other, so that, at the very moment the inheritance falls in the heirs takes by partition that is, as owners of defined shares and therefore, as tenants-in-common. Heritage in the case of stridhan is obstructed succession. (Chandavarkar and Russel, JJ.) BAI PARSON v. BAI SOMLI. 36 Bom. 424 = 15 I.C. 774 = 14 Bom. L.R. 400.

HINDU LAW—Joint family—Ancestral property.

———Joint family— Ancestral property—Collateral succession.

Where a joint family inherits encumbered property from a collateral, the mere fact that the encumbrance is paid off out of the joint family funds does not show that the property is acquired from such funds and the mere fact that the property is managed by the managing member of the family does not establish whether it is or is not treated as joint family property. Where the property is not self-acquired but inherited by the members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, and is such as could have been partitioned among them at the time that it was inherited, the rule of survivorship applies irrespective of the fact whether such property came by obstructed or unobstructed inheritance, i.e., whether it was inherited from a direct ancestor or from a collateral. ———Joint family—Family property—Acquisitions—Gift by Manager—Effect of.

In a joint Hindu family it is possible that a member of the family should make separate acquisition, and keep moneys and property so acquired as his separate property, but the question whether he has done so is to be judged from all the circumstances of the case. 34 I.A. 65, Ref. Though the manager of a joint Hindu family systematically mixed his professional earnings with receipts from the joint family properties in his accounts, and purchases by him in the name of himself or his brother are to be regarded as joint family property, it is still competent to him to make a gift out of his earnings to his own son-in-law though they have been brought into the account. A statement by the manager during his lifetime that he brought the properties as a provision for his son-in-law is an admission under S. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act and coupled with the other evidence as to the intention of the Manager, is sufficient to defeat a claim that the property was bought in the name of the son-in-law Benami for the joint family. The onus is on the person alleging it to be a self-acquisition to prove it. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Family property.

———Joint family — Family property — Possession of—Widow of co-parceners — Joint interest.

In a joint Hindu family all property is presumed to be held jointly no matter whose name appears in the Revenue Records. Where two brothers were joint their widows also must be presumed to be in joint possession of the property. No question of adverse possession arises in such a case. (Griffin, J.) SRI CHAND v. SURAJ KUAR. 9 I C. 146

———Joint family — Family property—Throwing into common stock.

Where a member of a joint Hindu family converts his self-acquisition into joint family property, all members of the family have the same right in it as in ancestral property. (Beaman and Heaton, JJ.) RANGBHAT RAMACHANDRA DHAT v. SITABAI BAND BHAT. 45 I.C. 584=20 Bom. L.R. 388.

———Joint family—Family property—Joint acquisitions—Proof.

Where father and son live together and where Hindu brothers live together as joint family work together and acquire property together it has the character of joint family property irrespective of nucleus. The point of nicety in determining when the common family fund becomes impressed with that character is to discover the intention of the person having the control of the fund that it should be appropriated to the common use. Where a Hindu father starts with nothing the mere fact that there are infant children does not lead to the conclusion that his individual earnings should become a common fund. Where the children grow up it becomes difficult to determine when the acquisitions of the one fund become acquisitions of the other. The test to determine when self-acquisitions become joint family property is contribution. (Beaman, J.) HARI DAS LALGI v NAROLAM RAGHAVJI. 14 I.C. 769=14 Bom. L.R. 237.

———Joint family—Family property—Properties in possession of one member—Presumption—Transferee from members.

A transferee from a member of a joint Hindu family of property, must show that the property was the separate property of his vendor, although there was no nucleus of ancestral joint family property. The presumption that property standing in the name and in the possession of a member of a joint Hindu family is joint family property would arise even where there was in fact no nucleus of ancestral joint family property. 19 W.R. 178; 10 W.R. 122, Rel. (Teunon and Walmsley, JJ.) GADHARBHATAK v. SATISH CHANDRA GHOSE. 31 I.C 854.

———Joint family—Family property—Property in the hands of one member—Presumption.

———Joint family—Family property—Onus of proof.

Where separation is proved the onus is shifted on the plaintiff who asserts jointness of proving that the house is joint property. (Campbell, J.) NARSINGH DAS v. UTTAM CHAND. 1923 Lah. 392.

———Joint family—Family property—Question of status—Burden of proof.

An agreement of family settlement was followed by an arbitration award and the award was duly registered: Under the award the house in dispute was assigned to the widows of one of the brothers Held, the onus was shifted on to the plaintiffs' reversioners to prove that the property was joint Hindu family property at the time of alienation of the house in question by widow. A decree for maintenance against the male members of the family on the ground that the widow was entitled to be maintained out of her husband's share of the joint property does not help the plaintiffs to prove that there was any joint Hindu family. The house in suit might very well be joint family property without the family being joint in the true sense. (Scott Smith and Motisagar, JJ.) KARAM CHAND v. MT. HAR KUAR. 1923 Lah. 371.

———Joint family—Family property—Onus of proof.

All the property in the hands of the members of a joint Hindu family is to be treated as joint property but it is open to any other member to show that any particular property is his separate property. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Le-Rossignol, J.) PARAMANAND v. SHEO CHARAN DAS. 2 Lah. 69=21 P L R. 1921=59 I.C. 256=15 P.W.R. 1921.

———Joint family — Family property — Acquisition by member—Presumption—Plea of self-acquisition—Onus.

The legal presumption is that all the properties held by any member of a joint family so long as the family is joint are joint properties. Joint acquisitions made by the several members in a joint family, while the family is joint are presumed to have been made from joint funds and belong to the joint family. The mere fact that any particular acquisition is in the name of a member of the joint family, does not warrant the assumption that it is the exclusive acquisition of the member of the named and not of the whole joint family. ———Joint family — Family property — Acquisition—Presumption.

The normal state of a Hindu family is joint and an acquisition in the name of any one member does not warrant the assumption that it is his exclusive acquisition. (Shah Din and Scott-Smith, JJ.) SHAM DAS v. POHLO RAM. 18 P.W.R. 1913=18 I.C. 604= 16 P.L.R. 1912. (Supp.)

———Joint family — Family property — Benami purchase—Burden of proof.

Where the head of a joint Hindu family makes a purchase in the name of another member the onus of proving the purchase was not benami lies on the person asserting it. (6 M.I.A. 53, Foll.) The onus may, however, be shifted in particular cases. Thus where the transaction is shown to be in the nature of a distribution among various members or for the advancement in life of one of them the initial presumption may cease to exist. ———Joint family — Family property — Transfer of name in khata.

Merely from a transfer of khata from the name of the father in a joint family to that of one of the sons no presumption arises that the subject of the transfer has ceased to be joint family property and become the self-acquisition of that particular member. ———Joint family—Family property—Acquisition—Nucleus of ancestral property—Acquisitions kept separate, proof of.

The presumption of jointness in respect of property acquired by each member of a joint Hindu family having an original nucleus is not rebutted by the fact that the ancestral assets were small in proportion to the value of the subsequent acquisitions. Though it is possible that a member of a joint family could make separate acquisitions and keep the money and property separate yet the question whether he has done so is to be judged from all the circumstances of the case. 40 All. 159 (P.C.), Foll. One Rajaram's share was decreed in a partition suit along with a considerable amount. Rajaram's minor son was a party to the partition suit. The minor son of Rajaram on attaining majority filed a suit for recovering the sums which was dismissed by both the Courts in India but the Privy Council remanded his suit for trial holding that the arrangement by Rajaram did not bind Rajaram's son. Before the suit came on for trial Rajaram got two more sons who were added as co-defendants. The new-born sons pleaded that the arrangement by Rajaram failed wholly. Held, that the agreement did not purport to be a release of individual rights or shares in the fund at all; it did not purport to effect any division of the joint family estate that then existed between Rajaram and his son in the subject-matter of these decrees. On the contrary what it purported to do was to release the whole of the debts that were then owing to the joint family in consideration of Tuljaram not prosecuting his appeals. As between the members of a joint family inter se, whatever may be the powers of the manager as regards the minor members of the family, there is no authority for holding that he can start a new venture without the concurrence of the adult co-parceners; at least there must be evidence of acquiescence. The immunity of a manager to account for past transactions does not entitle him to enter into illegal transactions and use joint family property for the purpose. It will be gross misconduct sufficient to entitle the others to require the manager to suffer the loss personally and to put back any money that he may have taken out of the family for such transactions. When the manager is made to account for moneys expended by him, there is no general rule that he should pay interest on the sum to be made good. (Spencer and Kumaraswamy Sastry, JJ.) HINDU LAW—Joint family—Presumption.

——Joint family—Presumption.

Where property stands in the name of a female member of a joint Hindu family, there is no presumption that it is joint family property and not her absolute property. (Holmwood and Chapman, JJ.) PROTAB CHANDRA v. SARAT KAMINI DEBYA. 24 I C. 90.

——Joint family—Presumption—Jointness.

In cases of joint Mitakshara families there is a presumption of jointess of their property, as well as of the business which they carry on. The onus is on the person setting up a property as his own to prove it. (Fletcher, J.) C.E. GREY v. WALKER GOWARD & CO. 18 I C. 753= 40 Cal. 523.

——Joint family—Presumption of jointness.

The presumption in the case of Hindu families is in favour of jointness. Where a guardian was appointed for three minors who constituted a joint family, and after each one attained majority his share was given to him and during their minority as well as afterwards the accounts of the income were kept separate in the name of each minor and after all the brothers attained majority the income was divided among them and one of them admitted that he had no concern in the property of another brother, held, that the presumption of jointness was rebutted. ———Joint family—Presumption of jointness.

HINDU LAW—Joint family—Presumption.

——Joint family—Presumption—Jointness—Onus.

There is an initial presumption that the property of every Hindu family is joint, and this presumption is not rebutted by showing that the members dealt with certain paternal property as their own and that in a will by the head of the family the members were mentioned as having been divided. (Robertson, J.) RAMU LAL v. HARCHARAN DAS.

——Joint family—Presumption—Jointness—Separate living and dealing.

Where two Hindu brothers have long been living separately and dealing with their individual acquisitions separately and without reference to the other, the presumption as to jointness in a Hindu family loses much of its force. (Dhobley, A.J.C.) LAXMAN BHAT v. BANABAI. 64 I.C. 906.

——Joint family—Presumption—Separation—Proof.

The ordinary presumption of jointness of a Hindu family is displaced by the presumption from the admitted separation of certain members of the family and a person alleging jointness must prove it by other means. Separate messing and living does not necessarily indicate separation in estate especially where the members cultivate jointly and that they divided only so much produce as was necessary for household purposes and kept the rest for purposes of len den. (Kotval, A.J.C.) SUA v. DUKALU. 59 I.C. 499.

——Joint family—Presumption—Rebuttal.

Where a brother and his two minor brothers under the guardianship of their mother execute a transfer of joint family property, it may be presumed that the manager (brother) was not acting as the Kartha or manager of the family. But where a father makes a transfer and his minor sons are nominally joined, the presumption that may be raised is that the transfer has been made by the father in his capacity as manager. Joint family—Self-acquisitions.

———Joint family—Self-acquisition—Blending of separate property with joint property makes property joint.

When members of a joint family, who have control over the joint estate, blend that estate with property in which they have separate interest, the whole property becomes joint. Whether separate estate is brought into a joint family account or the joint family property is brought into the separate accounts, the result is the same. The real question for determination is what is the conclusion to be drawn when people united, by bonds of close relationship and living as a joint family, draw for the joint family expenses out of a fund enriched by other contributions. If the members of a joint Hindu family confuse the income of their joint properties with their separate properties, their intention presumably is that the properties acquired with such mixed-up funds are for the joint family. made without any detriment to the father's estate are not partible. Originally, to make such gains partible it was sufficient that the earner was maintained out of the family funds during his education. The rule is now narrowed down to the specialised education only. The partibility of such gains does not depend upon causa pronima nor is it negatived by the intervention of the personal elements of the individual co-parcener's character. Once a member is originally found to be equipped for the calling by a special training at the family expense his earnings remain partible throughout his life. He can, however, sever at any time from the family on the footing of bringing his acquisitions into hotchpot without any liability as to future earnings. There is no authority in the Mitakshara that the gains made as a pleader's clerk or broker or money-lender personally, and without the aid of the joint funds, by a member of a joint family who received an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family to which he belonged, should in law be regarded as partible, and not as his self acquired property. The expression "gains of science" does not apply to gains which are the result not of the education received at the expense of the joint family but of the peculiar skill, mental abilities and individual effort in applying and improving such education exercised by the person educated at the expense of the family. A mere general education preliminary to the acquisition of a specialised education does not constitute the earnings of joint family property. ———Joint family—Self-acquisition — Presumption—Nucleus.

The acquisition of an individual member of a joint family cannot be considered to be the joint family property unless there has been a nucleus of ancestral property which was utilised for such acquisition or the members have all thrown their joint earnings into the hotchpot with the intention of giving up their individual rights in them. Mere living together of the members of a family will not make the joint owners of properties acquired by each individual member. A Hindu joint family presupposes the possession of common property. 33 All. 677; 6 W.R. (P.C.) 43; 2 Mad. 19, Foll. (Wallis, C.J. and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.) ———Joint family — Self-acquisition—Endowments of office—Income—Savings from—Berar Patels and Patwaris Law—Property purchased out of savings of emoluments of Patwari's office under.

Under the Hindu Law property allotted by the State to a person in consideration of the discharge of particular duties or as payment for an office is prima facie impartible, even though the duties of office may become hereditary in a particular family. Property purchased out of the savings of the income of a patwari is prima facie self-acquired property, and in the absence of any intention on the part of the acquirer to treat it as joint family property his co-parcener cannot claim a partition of the same. Fields purchased by a Hindu patwari out of the savings of the emoluments of his office under the Berar Patels and Patwaris Law, 1900, are his self-acquired property, and on a partition of the joint family property, in the absence of any indication that he agreed to allow the fields to be treated as joint family property, his son has no right to claim a partition of such fields. ———Joint family—Self-acquisition—Proof of—Nucleus.

If certain property is to be regarded as joint family property, it must fall under one or other of three classes (1) ancestral property (i.e.), property inherited from a direct male ancestor, (2) property acquired by members of a joint family with the assistance of joint funds or by joint labour and (3) property originally self acquired but afterwards voluntarily thrown by the acquirer into the joint stock with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it. Very strong evidence is required to prove that the property falls under class (3) and the mere fact that the acquirer and the other members of the family live together is not sufficient to prove that the acquisition is joint family property. Where self-acquired property is bequeathed to sons, it should be held by the sons subject to the incident of survivorship, and each son takes an interest which passes to his heirs at his death unless otherwise indicated by the bequest. Because a Hindu family is joint it does not necessarily mean that it is possessed of joint property also. The person who alleges that property is joint must show that there was a nucleus around which the property accumulated. (Evans, J.C. and Lindsay, A.J.C.) RAMESWAR v. RUKMIN. 12 I C. 770=

If it were the law that some members of a joint family could escape from liability to perform contracts entered into by them on the ground that their contracts were not such as would bind the joint family and that they had no property other than that which was the property of the joint family, it would be necessary for every person with whom they sought to make a contract to assure himself that the business to which the proposed contract would relate was business of the joint family, and that no member of the joint family was a minor. Under such circumstances, it would be difficult to carry on business with persons who happened to be members of a joint family of the Province of Madras. The distinction between an ancestral business and one started after the death of the ancestor, as a source of partnership relations is patent. In the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of an ancestor to an established business with the benefits and obligations. In the other, they rest ultimately on contractual arrangements between the parties. It is not competent to the Karta to impose on a minor co-parcener the risks and liabilities of a new business started by himself: consequently a creditor of the new business cannot make the minor's share of the family properties or in the ancestral business liable for the debts of the new business. ———Joint family — Trade — Manager — Contracts — Liability of others — Starting of new business — Profits — Self-acquisition — Rights of others.

A joint family firm must be regarded like any other joint family asset. If a business is carried on by any one or more members of a joint Hindu family for the benefit of the entire family, and there are other members who do not actively participate in the conduct of the business or are minors and such business had been originally established to the detriment of the family property and handed down hereditarily then the resultant liability of all the members of the family would be referable to the notion of managership by one or more members for the benefit of the rest in the usual sense in which the relation of the manager and other members of the family have often been accepted and defined in the Courts; the liability of the members not actively concerned in the conduct of the business would be restricted to the share of each such member in the joint family property. It might be doubted whether any personal liability beyond that, can attach to members of the family not actively carrying on the business, not in the commercial sense of partners, and, therefore, not parties to any contracts made with the firm as a firm. If one or more members of a joint Hindu family start a business of their own not at the expense of the Hindu family nor with the intention of sharing its profits and losses with the other members, the position of the members so carrying on joint family business and their liabilities to the other members have to be regulated with reference to the extent to which the conduct of such a firm and the resulting profits fall within the legal notion of self-acquisition. ———Joint family — Trade—Guardian — Powers of guardian—Trading family.

A guardian cannot embark on a new trade at any rate without the sanction of the Court, so as to make the minor liable for debts. A karta of a joint Hindu family has power to manage a trade started by his ancestor, like any other family property which has descended from the ancestor. The powers of a guardian are more limited than those of a karta of a joint Hindu family. If the karta of a joint Hindu family chooses to apply under the Guardians and Wards Act, for being appointed a guardian of the minor and has been appointed as such guardian he comes under the control of the Court and can no longer exercise the power of a karta. A distinction is to be drawn between an ancestral trade and a new trade started after the death of the ancestor by the Manager of the family, and not one between the same line of business and a new line of business. Debts contracted by the Manager of a joint Hindu family for the purpose of a trade carried on by him for the benefit of the family in partnership with a stranger are payable out of a minor's interest in the joint family property. The liability of the minor member is not restricted to his share in the partnership assets under S 247 of the Contract Act but arises under the Hindu Law and the joint family property is liable for the debt. 35 Mad. 692, Dist. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Trade.

—Trade debts—Liability of minors—Ancestral family property and trade assets.

The managing member of a joint family whose members belong to a caste whose caste-calling is trade in certain articles is justified in continuing that caste-calling for the benefit of the family. The mother who is also guardian of a minor can continue such joint family business in which the minor was already interested. In the case of a trading caste or family the ordinary presumption is that the entire family credit and all the joint family properties are embarked in the business. 5 L.W. 341, Foll; 35 Mad. 692, Dist. ———Joint family—Trade—Minor—Liability of.

A minor member of a joint family upon whom an ancestral trade has descended is bound by all acts of the manager of the adult members acting as managers which are necessary to carry on that trade. But where a business is not ancestral a minor member is not necessarily interested in a business carried on by the major members of the joint family of which he is a member. A minor member of a joint family cannot become a partner in an ancestral business unless he takes active steps to be recognised as such after attaining majority. A minor member of a joint family firm can only be liable to the extent of the assets and income of the business. (Drake-Brockman, J.C. and Findlay, A J.C.) ———Joint family—Trade — Liability of other members.

The manager of a joint family has an implied authority to do whatever is best for all concerned and the test in each case is to see whether it was a transaction into which a prudent owner would enter in order to benefit the estate. The manager of a joint Hindu family may embark in money lending business in the ordinary course of management and for that purpose sell a property which brings no income to the family. But the shebait of an idol may not do so, for it is not in the ordinary course of management of the debutter property, and must therefore, amount to a breach of trust. 39 All. 437; 40 Mad. 709; 48 Cal. 797, Ref. The Courts, in dealing with claims for arrears of maintenance, possess a very large discretion to grant or to withold those arrears with special reference to the urgent need and necessities of the widow. As soon as the widow satisfied the Court that she was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance provided that the time is within the period of limitation, the Court might in any given case award her, arrears to that extent and that would be quite independent of any demand on her part. In other words, while a demand is allowed to be prima facie evidence of need on the widow's part, it is not in a demand that the right to obtain for arrears of maintenance is rooted, Nor indeed is any demand necessary. A claim for maintenance by a female member of a joint family is a personal claim against members of the family. It can only be made a charge on the family property by an order of the Court or by a properly executed document. A transferee of joint property from the properly authorised member of a joint family takes that property free of any claims to maintenance by family. ———Maintenance—Rate of—Widow.

The principle on which the rate of maintenance for a widow is to be fixed is to see the mode of living of the family during her husband's lifetime, and the extent of the estate and then to award such sum as will enable her to live in the same degree of comfort suited to her position as widow without doing injustice to the other members of the family. So in a Vysya trading family consisting of father and son and their wives having an annual income of Rs. 12,000 and family property worth 4 lakhs, a sum of Rs. 140 a month was awarded as maintenance of the son's widow seeing such ———Maintenance — Widow — Right of residence in husband's house—Purchaser for value.

HINDU LAW—Maintenance—Widow.

Ordinarily, a Hindu widow has a right of residence in the family house from which she may not be ousted except to satisfy claims which are paramount to her right of residence, as it forms a part of her right to maintenance. The widow of an undivided member of a Hindu family can set up her right of residence against a purchaser for value, unless the alienation was for family purposes but the widow of a divided member must liquidate any debt which was binding on her husband unless it was incurred in fraud of her right. When, however, the husband loses the property in his lifetime, there is nothing left to the widow, from which she can derive maintenance. (Le Rossignol, J.) In the case of an improper alienation the equity is enforceable against the alienee under the same conditions that apply to any other equity. Marriage—Capacity to give.

———Marriage—Capacity to give—Guardian of marriage—Maternal and paternal relatives—Injunction—Reasonable and probable.

According to the Hindu Law, in the presence of competent paternal relatives, the maternal relatives of a girl cannot give her in marriage except where the paternal relatives refuse to act or have disqualified themselves from acting. A Hindu girl living with her paternal aunt and paternal uncle was made over to her maternal uncle under an agreement between the parties. Subsequently the paternal aunt's application to be appointed guardian was dismissed. Afterwards, the maternal uncle of the girl arranged for her marriage with a certain person. The paternal aunt then obtained a temporary injunction and got the wedding put off. The marriage, however, took place with the person selected by the maternal uncle, the maternal uncle sued for damages for the loss caused by the wrongful injunction and the postponement of the wedding. Held, that the maternal uncle could enter into a contract of marriage for the girl. Marriage—Ceremonies.

———Marriage—Ceremonies—Marriage fees.

If the ceremony of marriage is taken as a whole and performed in the Hindu form, the Joshi is entitled to his fee, but if it is found that the form is in the Pancha Kalas Lingayat, then he is not entitled to his fee. The marriage ceremony is to be taken as a whole to decide whether it is in the Hindu form or in the Pancha Kalas Lingayat. 14 Bom. 167, Expl. (Scott, C.J. and Batchelor, J.) Marriage—Dissolution.

———Marriage—Dissolution—Minor—Right to repudiate on attaining majority—Restitution of conjugal rights.

HINDU LAW—Marriage—Divorce.

Underthe Hindu Law a marriage once performed cannot be dissolved for any reasons whatsoever, even though the parties were minors and a Hindu wife cannot repudiate her marriage as soon as she comes of age or before consummation takes place merely on the ground that the marriage has been performed during her minority. If the girl purports to repudiate the marriage it is not a sufficient ground for refusing a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. (Abdul Raoof and Moti Sagar, JJ.) MUNSHI v. MT. BHAGWANI 13 P.L.R. 1922=1922 Lah. 79.

Marriage—Divorce.

———Marriage—Divorce—Custom — When valid.

A custom by which marriage-tie can be dissolved by either husband or wife against the wish of the divorced party and for no reason but out of mere caprice, the sole condition attached being a payment of a sum of money fixed by the caste, is opposed to public policy within the meaning of S. 23 and is also repugnant to Hindu Law and therefore cannot be judicially recognised. ———Marriage—Divorce—Re-marriage.

Re-marriage of a divorced Koli woman is valid and is not regarded with any social censure or disapproval. The distinctive mark of the asura form of marriage is the payment of money for the bride, and absence of such payment of a bride-price is a distinctive mark of the approved form. The marriage of a divorced Koli woman should not be regarded as marriage in an unapproved form when the father giving the woman away receives no pecuniary benefit from the marriage. ———Marriage — Eligibility — Intercaste Brahmin and Sudra — Marriage invalid—Estoppel.

The marriage between a Brahmin woman and a Sudra is illegal and void under the Hindu Law and the woman is not entitled to maintenance unless her connection with him has been of a continuous character. There is no estoppel against the validity of a marriage from the mere fact that the parties who are legally incompetent to marry each other went through the Hindu ceremony of marriage and thereafter lived together for several years as husband and wife. ———Marriage—Eligibility—Wife's sister's daughter—Telugu country.

The marriage of a Hindu with his wife's sister's daughter is not illegal. The custom of allowing a Brahmin to marry his wife's sister's daughter has been recognised by judicial decisions ; that custom applies especially in the case of Sudras, such as Telugu Velamas who generally follow the Brahmin custom. Marriage—Evidence of.

———Marriage—Evidence of—Mental incapacity—Effect of—Presumption in favour of marriage and legitimacy and due performance of ceremonies.

The objection to a marriage on the ground of mental incapacity depends on a question of decree. Held, that in the case before the Board, the evidence of mental incapacity was wholly insufficient to establish a decree of that defect as to rebut the extremely strong presumption in favour of the validity of the marriage. Where a man and a woman were proved to have been recognised by all persons concerned as man and wife, so described in important documents on important occasions and their daughters were respectably married as would be natural in the case of legitimate children; held, that these facts, following upon a ceremony of marriage which undoubtedly took place, though its validity attacked, afforded an extremely strong presumption in favour of the validity of the marriage and legitimacy of its offspring. The like presumption applies to the question whether the formal requisites of a valid marriage ceremony were satisfied. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) MONJI LAL v. CHANDRABATI KUMARI. 38 Cal. 700=38 I.A 122=15 C.W.N. 790=(1911) 2 M.W.N. 91=13 Bom. L.R. 634=14 C.L.J. 72=10 M.L.T. 53=11 I.C. 502=21 M.L.J. 933 (P.C.).

HINDU LAW—Marriage—Evidence of.

———Marriage—Evidence of—Presumption.

When a marriage in fact is once established a presumption will arise in favour of a marriage in law, especially where it is celebrated long ago. 13 M.I.A. 141, Ref. BAI KASHI v. JAMNADAS MANSUKH RAICHAND. 16 I.C. 133=14 Bom. L.R. 547.

———Marriage—Evidence of—Presumption from cohabitation.

The presumption in cases of long and continuous co-habitation is in favour of marriage, though the proof of direct evidence of marriage is unsatisfactory. The presumption can be rebutted only by strong, distinct and conclusive evidence and does not arise if the connection is illicit in its origin. Habit and repute may evidence but never can constitute marriage. A connection by adultery may be evidenced, after the adultery ceases, by habit and repute, to be a marriage, where marriage is possible between the parties. But where no valid marriage is possible, no amount of evidence as to habit and repute can establish a marriage. (Leslie Jones and Broadway, JJ.) ———Marriage—Evidence of—Sikhs.

Where a Sikh of position has apparently made a woman his lawful wife the presumption is that all formalities in his power have been gone through. The form of marriage among the Sikhs differs from those of the Hindus. Among Jats marriage laws are lax. Where there is a marriage in fact, the presumption is that there was a marriage in law. Where an alienation by a guardian is questioned by a minor after attaining majority the onus of proving necessity is not always on the defence and if it is shown that the consideration for the alienation went in discharge of previous debts some of which is proved to have been contracted to save the minor's estate the onus is shifted to the minors of showing that the alienation was not for the purpose binding on him. Whether the onus has been shifted in a particular case is a question of fact. 6 M.I.A. 393; 40 Cal. 288, (P.C.), Ref. (Tyabji and Spencer, JJ.) HINDU LAW—Minority and Guardianship —Acts of guardian.

———Minority and guardianship—Acts of guardian—Alienation by.

Per Sundara Iyer, J.—The duties of a natural guardian of a minor must be regulated by considerations of what amounts to the interests of the minor. The discretion in the duty of discharging the debts binding on the minor rests on the guardian. The question would be whether that discretion had been properly exercised. The Court should consider whether in the circumstances that existed at the time of alienation the act would be considered as a prudent one by men of ordinary prudence. To constitute pressure or necessity demand by the creditor is not necessary. Considerable latitude must be allowed to the guardian in the exercise of its discretion. Per Sadasiva Iyer, J.—If the guardian of a Hindu minor's property after weighing all the then existing circumstances, acts in the best interests of the minor, it is binding on the minor even if the guardian acted wrongly. The alienee is protected, if he acts in good faith after making due enquiry that the guardian's acts appeared for the benefit of the minor. (Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ.) ——Partition — Accounts — Marriage expenses incurred after suit but before actual partition.

Under the Hindu Law, the manager of a joint family is not obliged to keep accounts while the family remains joint. When a partition is asked for, partition takes place of the property as it exists in the hands of the manager. From the date of the suit there is a severance of interest and for purposes of succession the family members are no longer considered joint; but it does not follow that thereafter until the joint family property is actually divided it does not remain joint. If pending such division there are many expenses which should be properly incurred by the joint family purse, (e.g., marriage expenses) those expenses are taken out of the family property, and they cannot be debited to any particular co-parcener. (Macleod, C.J. and Heaton, J.) RAMNATH v. GOTURAM. 54 I.C. 116=21 Bom. L.R. 1179.

——Partition — Accounts — Liability of manager.

The manager cannot be called on to defend past transactions. The account which has to be taken is merely an enquiry into existing assets. This general rule, however, has one exception. viz., in the case of minors for they cannot be deemed to acquiesce in the management of the estate. (Beaman, J.) HARI DAS LALJI v. NAROTAM RAGHAVJI. 14 I.C. 769=14 Bom. L.R. 237.

——Partition—Accounts—Manager's duty to account.

The only account that the karta is liable to submit in a suit for partition is as to the existing state of the property divisible. The parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past in equalities of enjoyments of members or other matters. (Mookerjee and Panton, JJ.) NIBARAN v. NIRUPAMA.

———Partition — Accounts — Purchase of property.

In a partition suit the Court will not, except in special circumstances. Order an account to be taken of past transactions. Where it is impossible to predicate how much will ultimately be realized out of the outstanding debts, it is sufficient to give the plaintiff a declaration that he is entitled to his proportionate share of whatever may be recovered. Any property acquired by a member with his own money after the passing of the preliminary decree for partition would not be liable to partition, but when, it is shown that he possessed ancestral funds from which such property could be acquired, it lies on him to show that those funds were not employed for the purpose. If he fails to discharge this burden, it must be presumed, that the property was acquired with money belonging to the joint family and it is therefore, liable to partition. (Broadway and Brasher, JJ.) LACHHMAN DAS v. NANAK CHAND.
23 P.W.R. 1923=1923 Lah. 20.

———Partition—Accounts — Manager's liability to account.

Where an account has to be taken with a view to make a partition of joint family properties, the account is merely an enquiry into the existing assets and the head of the family cannot in general be called upon to defend the propriety of his past transactions except in cases of fraud, misappropriation or gross reckless waste. The manager being the accounting party has to file an account as to the properties available for partition but the other members are not bound to accept it. The enquiry directed by the Court should be conducted in the usual manner to find out what the property consists of. The manager should be directed to file his accounts and the other members given opportunity to verify the same, The mere fact that account books were not kept would not in the absence of evidence to show that the accounts produced are false in any particular render him liable. ———Partition—Accounts, method of taking —Custom among Vaisyas.

The account to be taken in a partition suit is an account of the assets and liabilities of the family on the date of the plaint. ———Partition— Accounts— Liability of manager—Division in status.

There may be a division in status as distinguished from a division of property. The former is a matter of individual decision while the latter is the resultant from that decision. A separation of one branch of the family does not necessarily put an end to the joint management of the estate by the manager. In an ordinary partition suit where there is no previous separation the enquiry is in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct directed to ascertain the divisible assets, the manager not being liable to account for his past dealings with the family property. A Hindu family is presumed to be joint till the contrary is proved. ———Partition—Burden of proof—Partial partition.

Where it is once admitted by the plaintiffs that there had been a partition before the date of their suit for partition the burden of proof lies upon them to prove that the properties in suit were joint family property and were undivided at the partition, that is, continued to be kept joint, till the date of suit the presumption being, that all property that belonged to the joint family was divided at the partition. Whether the property in suit was joint at the date of the partition and continued to be joint thereafter depends upon the questions, when was the property acquired and when did the partition take place. ———Partition—Burden of proof—Allowance out of joint funds given by sons to mother, effect of—Lease executed by all members and not by managing member alone—Effect of.

The burden of proving alleged partition lies upon him who alleges separation. The mere fact that sons in a joint Hindu family gave their mother a small separated allowance out of the joint family funds for her private use especially to be expended on religious purposes, does not show separation of the family; nor does the fact that a lease is executed by all the family members, and not by the managing member alone, establish such separation. ———Partition—Burden of proof.

The onus of proving an alleged separation as well as the date thereof lies on those alleging separation. In the case of a Hindu Mitakshara family, there is no doubt a presumption of jointness and anyone who pleads disruption must prove it. Failure to prove when exactly disruption took place, does not conclusively show that no partition took place at all. The circumstances under which separation may be deduced are all set out in Trevelyan on Hindu Law, p. 349. Held on the facts, absence of commensality, separate transactions, separate entry of shares in revenue records and other similar circumstances, clearly indicate separation in status. Partition—Declaration of intention.

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Agreement to an arbitrator to effect a partition—Effect of.

It is settled law in the case of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, that a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately even though no actual division takes place; and the commencement of a suit for partition is sufficient to effect a severance in interest even before decree. 11 M. I. A. 75; 5 I. A. 228; 43 C. 1031; 39 A. 496, Foll. An agreement among all the joint holders to constitute a particular person to partition the joint property coupled with an undertaking to accept whatever partition he might make, is quite sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to put an end to survivorship on the death of one of them. HINDU LAW — Partition—Declaration of intention.

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Service of notice by a co-parcener.

According to Mitakshara an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty creates a division of the interest which until then, was held in jointness. This intention may be intimated by the sending of notice. (Mr. Ameer Ali). RAMALINGA ANNAVI v. NARAYANA ANNAVI. 45 Mad. 489= 43 M.L.J. 426=(1922) M.W.N. 399= 26 C.W N. 929=16 L.W. 639= 30 M L T. 255=20 A.L J. 889= 24 Bom. L.R. 1209=49 I.A. 168= 1922 P.C. 201 (P.C.).

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Onus on person asserting.

A disruption of the status of jointness of a Hindu family may take place by agreement without the division of the estate by metes and bounds. Even an unambiguous expression of an intention by one member of the family to separate and hold his share separately is sufficient. But the question is one of fact and the onus is on the party alleging separation of interest or the intention to separate to establish it affirmatively. (Mr. Ameer Ali). GIRDHAR DAS v. SRI KRISHNA DUTT. 18 A L.J. 345= 39 M L.J. 18=29 M L T. 71= 23 Bom. L.R. 1348=56 I.C. 293= 12 L.W. 759 (P.C.).

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Unilateral declaration by member—Acceptance of less than his share—Effect.

The unequivocal and unmistakable manifestation by a member of joint Hindu family by his words or conduct of a fixed or determined intention to become separate is sufficient to effect the separation of his title and the severance of his interest although division of possession or partition by metes and bounds has not taken place, or though there be no separation in food and dwelling. A separating member of such family may of his own free-will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him, and renounce all claims to the rest. Held, on the evidence that the appellant had separated in interest and title before the acquisition of the property in suit and that it was therefore his self-acquired property. (Lord Atkinson) AMRIT RAO v. MUKUND RAO. 53 I.C. 868= 16 N.L.R. 165 (P.C.)

HINDU LAW — Partition—Declaration of intention.

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Filing of suit—Severance in status—Intimation.

In Hindu Law " partition " does not mean simply division into specific shares, it covers both division of title and division of property. It is not the law that an agreement between all the co-parceners is essential to the disruption of the joint status or that the severance of the rights can only be brought about by the actual division and distribution of the property held jointly. " Separation " in the sense of the severance of the status of jointness is a matter of individual volition. 35 All. 80, Foll.; 8 W.R. (P.C.) 1, Expl. Once an individual co-parcener has unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-sharers his decision to sever himself from the joint family his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable. Neither the co-sharers can question it, nor can the Court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons were well-founded or sufficient. There is an immediate severance of the joint status and the Court has simply to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others. The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct, it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit. 8 W.R. (P.C.) 1, Expl. 4 Cal. 434; 18 Cal. 157, Ref.; 8 W.R. 82, Appr. If, therefore, a member of a joint family intimates to his co-parceners his desire to become divided and institutes a suit for partition, but dies before the preliminary decree, his widow is entitled to inherit his share in the joint property and to continue the suit as his legal representative. 40 I.A. 40; 11 M.I.A. 71, 76; 17 I.A 194 and 10 W.R. 273, Ref. ———Partition—Declaration of intention—Separation from commensality and joint worship—Unilateral declaration.

Separation from commensality and joint worship which may be due to various causes does not necessarily effect a division of the joint undivided estate. What may amount to a separation or what conduct on the part of the members may lead to a disruption of the joint undivided family and convert a joint tenancy into a tenancy-in-common must depend on the facts of each case. A definite and unambiguous declaration by one member of a joint Hindu family of his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty amounts to separation, if it is unequivocally and clearly expressed. Where it was shown that separation from commensality and joint worship between two brothers arose from a difference in their religious opinions and there was evidence of conduct inconsistent with partition or exclusion from enjoyment, held, that severance was not proved. Although at the time of the advance of money the subject-matter of dispute, the family had expressed the intention to separate, and in the eyes of the law, they were no longer members of a joint Hindu family, yet if there had been no partition of the joint property, the onus, would be upon the defendants to show that the advance made to their father, was made after the actual division of that property so that they would no longer be liable for such advance. ———Partition—Declaration of intention—Expression in will—Communication to others.

In a Mitakshara family a member may exercise his intention without the assent of the other members to go out of the family and to have his share of the property; and if at any rate that intention is communicated to the other members of the family there is a good separation. A member of a joint Hindu family executed a Will which was admitted to probate but his brother claimed his properties by survivorship. Held, that the will having been admitted to probate must be taken to be a valid document and that the statement in the will that there had been a separation was a sufficient evidence of intention to separate and to go out of the family. Where in a suit to set aside a mortgage by his father, plff. applied for amendment of the plaint by inserting a prayer for partition and plaintiff afterwards applied for leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit for partition which petition was allowed. The conduct of the plaintiff did not constitute such an unambiguous expression of intention as to effect a severance of status between him and his father the first defendant. If a person is a bona fide purchaser from the father of a Hindu family for value having no notice of the unilateral declaration by the son of an intention to divide from his father he would be entitled to treat the father as having the power to sell the family property for the antecedent debts of the father and other lawful purposes as to bind the son. 57 I.C. 800=11 L.W. 611.

———Partition—Declaration of intention—Communication.

In order that a unilateral declaration of intention may effect the declarant's severance of status from a Hindu joint family, there must be some unequivocal and definite expression of intention on his part to the effect that in future he would regard himself as a separated member and the expression of such intention should be communicated to the other members or to the manager of the family. The mere fact that a member of a joint family asks for partition does not necessarily lead to the inference that he intended a separation of status before partition is effected. 41 Cal. 1031 (P.C.), Foll. If the male members of a joint Hindu family wish to become divided in status they are at liberty to agree to do so and on their so agreeing they become divided in status even though the properties are not actually divided between them by metes and bounds. A definite and unambiguous indication even by one member of his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. A definite partition of properties by metes and bounds is not essential to constitute a definite division in status between co-parceners. The presumption when one of several co-parceners becomes divided, is that the others also have become divided in status. (Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ.) BALAKRISHNA MUDALIAR v. RAJU MUDALIAR.

——Partition—Effect of—Nature of such suits.

The object of a suit for a partition is to alter the form of enjoyment of the joint property by the co-owners. Partition signifies the surrender of a portion of a joint right in exchange for a similar right from the co-sharers. The essence of partition is that the property is transferred into estates in severalty and one of such estates is assigned to each of the former occupants for his sole use and as his sole property. There is no anology between the process thus described and the enforcement of a money claim, even though associated with land, as in the case of a benami mortgage or of a benami lease, though even as regards leases and mortgages there is apparently some divergence of judicial opinion. A decree of a Settlement Court in Oudh made in 1869 in favour of the widows of two deceased Hindus for "superior proprietary rights" in property lineally descended to their husbands "the decree being subject to the rights of the other share-holders," does not affirm that a separation had taken place but, on the contrary, preserves all rights inherent in the property as burden lies upon him who alleged exclusion, to establish his assertion. Separate possession is not conclusive evidence of partition and must be interpreted in the light of all the circumstances of the case. The sole occupation by one co-sharer, of a portion of joint property does not constitute an ouster of the other co-sharers; and a co-sharer in possession of a portion of the common land, with the tacit or express consent of his co-sharers, cannot change the nature of that possession. ———Partition—Evidence of—Proof—Separate enjoyment—Inference.

It is by no means an unusual thing for members of a joint family when acquiring landed property by purchase to cause to be specified in their documents of title the shares which they would respectively take upon a partition. Where this is not done the ordinary inference from the document on the face of it would be that the vendees are taking in equal shares and the members of the family way will think it convenient that such a presumption where it is not in accordance with the facts, should be rebutted by a specification of shares; no clear inference in favour of separation or the break up of the joint family can be drawn from a transaction of this sort. It is quite conceivable that a deed of transfer might be executed as between members of a joint family merely in order that there might be clear evidence in existence as to their respective rights in the event of any future difference or separation. HINDU LAW—Partition—Evidence of.

Under the Hindu Law, a partition is effected between members of a joint family if there is a division of their rights; an actual distribution of the property by metes and bounds is not necessary. To determine whether two persons, members of a joint Mitakshara family, have separated so as to make the principle of survivorship no longer applicable between them, the Court must find whether they had an intention to separate, and, whether as a result of such intention, there has been severance of title and interest. To prove a partition there must be evidence of a complete separation in interest, a total disruption of the tie of joint family. A partition may occasionally be established by oral evidence, which though not directly proving the factum of partition, may be of such a character as to justify the inference that a partition must have been made between the parties or their predecessors. There may be a mutual arrangement for the management and enjoyment of separate portions of joint property which does not amount to partition. On the other hand the inference in favour of a theory of a partition would be strengthened if it was proved not only that the parties enjoyed separate and distinct portions of the family property for many years, but dealt with the separate portions in every respect as their own property, for instance, carried out improvements on them or effected alienations to strangers or to members of the family. ———Partition—Evidence of—Separation in food, worship and residence.

HINDU LAW—Partition—Evidence of.

From the separation of the members of the family in food, residence and worship it does not follow that the family had divided, for it might well be that in order to manage the family business and property at different places the members had to go to and live in those places separately. When a member of a Hindu family who is divided in status from others is in enjoyment of a portion of the family properties while the others enjoy other portions, he is not in law excluded or ousted from those other portions, so as to disentitle him to his share of those portions, however long their enjoyment by others. ———Partition—Evidence of—Admissions in litigation—Effect of.

A definition of shares in revenue papers is not, standing alone, sufficient evidence of a separation between the members of a Hindu family. ———Partition—Institution of suit—Withdrawal.

Where a junior member sues the manager for partition of his share not making the other coparceners parties, the decree in the suit which merely allots his share of the properties does not affect a division as between the other members and the manager. It is open to a coparcener who has filed a suit for partition to abandon that intention before the suit proceeds to a decree and to continue in a state of jointness. In such a case the filing of the plaint does not effect a severance. Where a partition takes place under a decree of Court whereby one member claims his share and obtains it, the effect of the decree on the remaining coparceners must be determined by the terms of the decree or where it is ambiguous by the scope of the suit. 25 Mad. 149; 30 Cal. 725 (P.C.); 31 Mad. 482; 29 All. 93; 31 M.L.J. 472, Rel,; 33 M.L.J. 759. Ref. (Wallis, C.J. and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) The claim of the eldest son under the Hindu Law to Jyeshtabhagam (or extra share) having long become obsolete, the act of the guardian of the plffs. (minor members) in assenting to such a share being given was not binding on them and that plffs., subject to the law of Limitation, were entitled to claim a fourth of the extra share given to the deft's. branch. The giving up of the extra share by the senior branch can only be by a registered deed and mere joint living, joint managements, failure to maintain accounts, incurring expenditure in common and joint acquisitions would not render the extra share co-parcenary property. The filling of a partition suit, amounts to separation but where one member separates himself from the family without a suit, either by taking no share or less share, the other members can remain united. If it is necessary to fix the shares of all the members, when only one member separates his separation means virtually separation of all. Once there is evidence sufficient to satisfy the court that the parties intended to sever, then the joint family status is put an end to, and with regard to any of the property which had hitherto been joint and has not been divided by metes and bounds there will have to be an express agreement between the parties that they should treat that property as belonging to them as joint tenants. They will then be joint tenants not as members of the joint family which no longer exists but under a special agreement made after the severance. 48 I. A. 151; 18 B. 611 Ref. (*Macleod, C. members holding the undivided property as members of a joint Hindu family. Where it was found that a very large portion of the family property was divided in 1889 amongst the members and from that date they began to separate, and had separate business and enjoyment in respect of their respective properties, it would be a legitimate presumption that they intended from that date to live divided and consequently they would own the property still remaining undivided as tenants-in-common and therefore a widow of one of the members is entitled to a formal partition of the property left undivided. ———Partition — Partial partition—Alienees from co-parceners—Rights of—Suit for general partition.

Per Macleod, C.J.—There may be cases in which one co-parcener purports to convey his interest in a particular item of family property to a stranger, while the other co-parcener (taking the simplest case of two co-parceners) sells his interest in the same property to another stranger. In such a case a suit might lie by one stranger against the other for partition of that item of the family property which had been wholly disposed of by the persons who were entitled to it. But such an action between strangers should only be allowed in the very plainest of cases, when it has been proved that the whole of the family interest in the property has been disposed of either by joint action between the members of the family or by separate action against which no dispute has been raised.

Per Coyajee, J.—The purchaser of an unascertained share in a joint family property cannot insist upon the possession of any definite piece of property. The remedy of the purchaser lies in a suit to have that share and interest ascertained by instituting a suit for general partition in which the whole of the joint family property should be included and all necessary parties joined. In a suit of that nature the court, in making the partition, would endeavour to give effect to the alienation and "so to marshal the family property amongst the co-parceners as to allot that portion of the family estate or so much of it as may be just" to the purchaser.

A purchaser from a co-parcener of his share of an item of joint family property can work out his rights only by a suit for general partition. (Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee, J.) ISHRAPPA v. KRISHNA PUTTA.

There is no doubt a presumption that where there is a partition in a family, there is a total partition and not merely a partial partition; but this is a presumption which can be rebutted and the circumstances in each case will show how much importance is to be attached to the presumption and what amount of evidence would be necessary to rebut it. Where a partition was effected between a father and his sons for a special reason, namely, that his sons by his first wife were not getting on well with him and his second wife, there is no separation as between the father and his sons by his second wife especially when the latter were minors at the time. The recital in the partition that there was a division into six shares of the family properties was only made for the purpose of fixing and ascertaining the shares of the outgoing co-parceners and did not effect a severance between the father and his sons by his second wife. An incorrect recital in a suit filed by members of a Hindu family against strangers that they were divided does not amount to a declaration of intention to divide. 35 A. 80; 43 C. 1031 Rel. Partition—Re-opening of.

———Partition—Re-opening of—Father—Powers of—Family arrangement—Document styled a will—Father's power to effect a partition—Assent of sons—Acting of the parties—Mutation of names—Reservation of right to cancel—Construction.

It is not competent to the father in a joint Hindu family to make a division of ancestral property by will amongst his sons, except with their consent. The father and managing member of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his three sons, divided substantially the whole of the joint family property between his three sons and his wife, reserving nothing to himself, and put them in possession of their respective shares. Two months later, the father executed a document styled a Will, in which he stated that he had made the division as aforesaid and the document ended with this clause: "If I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find mismanagement or character of any one bad, that I shall have power to cancel this Will which shall be enforced from the date of its execution." In pursuance of this arrangement mutation of names was effected and suits for rent brought by the sons severally in their own names. The division was unequal in that the eldest son was given a larger share than the two others. The arrangement was acted on for 10 years, after which period the younger sons sued for partition. Held, that though described as a Will, the document intended to take effect in praesenti and not from the death of the testator; that it embodied a family arrangement contemporaneously made and acted upon by all the parties for 10 years; that the sons were also adults, representing their respective branches of the family, accepted the partition and such acceptance not only bound them but also their sons; and that the last clause as to the cancellation being merely put in as a threat to keep the sons in good behaviour could not have been enforced specifically or at all, and did not prevent the partition from taking in effect in praesenti. It is an unabrogated rule of Hindu law that a common way or a road of ingress and egress reserved as common property between the various sharers at a previous partition cannot be the subject of a partition. The expression "common way" referred to in Mitakshara Ch. I. S. ———Partition—Suit for—Mesne profits—Right of co-parcener—Accounts—Manager—Liability of property subject to mortgage.

HINDU LAW—Partition—Suit for.

A member of a joint Hindu family suing for partition and for the profits on his share is really suing for an account of the profits received by the manager of the portion in his possession so that the proceeds so received by the latter which are also divisible property may be divided and his share therein also given to him. His right to such profits is not as mesne profits received by a person in wrongful possession but as appurtenant to his right in his share of the lands. In a suit for partition by a member of a joint Hindu family, the plaintiff is not ordinarily entitled to claim past mesne profits. He is not entitled to interest on his share of the profits realised by the defendant who was in possession subsequently. The plaintiff is not disentitled to his share of the profits realised by the said defendant from family properties which were subject to mortgages and which were redeemed by the said defendant with family funds. In that case plaintiff is entitled to the profits only from the date of redemption. The defendant is not entitled to interest on the amounts paid by him for redemption. ———Partition—Suit for—Debt left out of account in partition suit as valueless—Subsequent suit to enforce the debt—Joinder of parties.

Per Sadasiva Iyer, J.—A co-parcener who wishes to partition family properties has only a single cause of action in respect of all the joint properties and therefore no suit lies for partial partition. After partition none of the parties to it holds any of the properties jointly with any other party unless the partition agreement or partition award or decree itself provides for such joint holding or unless there has been accident, mistake or fraud in the non-inclusion of some of the property at the division. In a suit for partition by a son against his father, a mortgagee debt due to the family was left out of account in arriving at the amount decreed to the son for his share as the mortgage was considered to be valueless. Held, the son cannot subsequently claim partition of the mortgage deed in a second suit and therefore a subsequent suit to enforce the mortgage by father alone is not bad for non-joinder of parties. Per Napier, J.—

HINDU LAW—Partition—Suit for.

A decree in a partition suit only operates as a mutual release of the parties. Any property left undivided for any reason as in a case where it is considered valueless and so not taken into account continues to be joint. Hence the suit to enforce the mortgage left out of account the son is a necessary party and the suit instituted by the father alone should be dismissed for non-joinder. The mere fact that the heads of a religious institution call themselves as owners of the foundation is no evidence that any particular property is the personal property of the Acharya. ———Religious endowment—Mutt—Head of—Position of—Succession to office—Custom—Collusive appointment of disqualified person—Vacancy—Appointment of senior disciple.

A mutt or asthal is an institution of a monastic nature. It is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets and the observance of its rights. The followers of the cult and disciples in the institution are known as chelas; the chelas are of two classes celebite and non-celebite. The mahant is the head of the institution. The property of a mutt or asthal is held by the mahant as its owner in trust for the mutt or institution itself. Although large administrative powers are undoubtedly vested in the reigning mahant the trust exists and must be respected. Succession to the mahant in such property follows the succession to the office. As the mahant is not merely a spiritual preceptor but also a trustee for the asthal, the Courts will be justified in ignoring a collusive or fraudulent appointment of a successor by the reigning mahant and fill up the vacancy according to the rules of the institution. Questions of succession to the office of mahant or head of a mutt are not settled by an appeal to the general customary law. It must depend on the custom or usage of the particular mutt or asthal. 2. Mad. 179; 11 M. I. A. 428 Ref. Without determining whether the custom of the mutt was for the senior chela to succeed as of right or for the mahant to appoint his successor from among his chelas, the Privy Council held that the mahant had abdicated his office which could not revert to him having regard to his gross breach of trust in making a collusive and corrupt nomination as regards his successor that the appointment itself was invalid and that the senior chela was entitled to possession of the office of mahant and the properties appertaining thereto, as on a vacancy. Where the Generally in the case of mutts the rule is that the mahant or spiritual head is the owner. But this is not an invariable rule and by the usage and custom of the institution, the properties might vest in trustees other than its spiritual head. In any case the property is held solely in trust for the purposes of the institution and it is the duty of the manager of such a mutt to refrain from the personal enjoyment of surplus income and to add it to capital. 43 Cal. 707; 41 Mad. 296; 2 Mad. 175, Ref. In a suit by the head of a mutt to recover a village forming part of its endowment, it was found that for a period of 80 years before suit, trustees represented by defendants were in possession and managing the village and had applied the income for the purposes of the institution In the Inam Register they were recorded as trustees with the assent of the original donor's representatives. Held, that the plaintiff had no right to village as the defendants were the managers of the endowment according to the usage of the institution; and further the defendants' possession, though as trustees, was adverse to the plaintiff for more than the statutory period. In suits to obtain control or management of a religious institution, when no misapplication is proved, and the defendant admits himself a trustee for the institution, the ordinary limitation of 12 years applies. Great weight is due to the entries in the Inam Register, in the absence of actual and authentic evidence of the history of a mutt. (Lord Shaw). The law with regard to Mutt is governed by the sages of each Mutt, but the general usage to be presumed in the absence of contrary evidence is that the head of a Mutt, nominated his Chela during his lifetime to succeed him on his death. ———Religious endowment—Mutt—Head of—Qualifications of.

In the case of Madhava Mutt and the qualifications of the head of the Mutt are (1) the person to be appointed must be a sanyasi, i. e., one who has renounced all worldly ties and has been initiated into the brotherhood and a person competent to make the nomination; (2) he must be initiated into sanyasam when he is a bala brahmachari, i. e., batchelor below the age of 16; (3) the initiation into sanyasi and ordination to the Mutt must be contemporaneous. A Pandarasannadhi has powers to compromise suits affecting trust properties equal to those of a trustee. They are not necessarily void. But where it appears that a decree was passed on compromise the onus lies on the decree-holders to show that the compromise was lawful and bona fide. If the compromise is entered with a desire to escape the necessity of having to attend and be examined as a witness by the Pandarasannadhi, the same amount to a breach of duty and cannot be regarded as bona fide. A Pandarasannadhi is not accountable for the expenditure of the income of the Mutt properties but is under a moral if not a legal obligation to apply the Debts may be contracted for a mutt by its head and debts so contracted may be recovered from the mutt property and the successor is bound to pay them to the extent of the assets received by him. The head of a mutt, however, cannot pledge the credit of the mutt for debts contracted for mutt purposes even if they could be met from the current income. The head of a mutt has no larger authority to incur debts than the heads of other religious institutions or the guardian of infant heir. He can pledge the credit of the mutt only for financial necessity. The conduct of festivals usually conducted in the mutt is a necessity. 2 Mad. 175; 2 I. A. 145, Ref. ———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession.

Mutts are of three descriptions, viz., maurusi, Panchayati, and hakini. (1) In maurusi mutts, the office of chief mahant is hereditary and devolves upon the chief disciple of the existing mahant who moreover usually nominates him as successor. (2) In Panchayati mutts, the office is elective, the presiding mahant being selected by an assembly of mohunts. (3) In hakini mutts, the appointment of the presiding mahant is vested in the ruling power or in the party who has endowed the temple. In No. 1, the chela succeeds and in default of a chela, the Gurubhai succeeds; where there are more chelas than one, the oldest generally succeeds but a junior chela may succeed if he be found capable and if he be selected by the last mahant as his successor. (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) ACHYUTANANDA DAS v. JAGANNATH DAS. 21 C. L. J, 96=27 I C. 739= 20 C. W. N. 122.

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession—Mode of appointment—Selection by the mahant for the time being.

Among Nanak Shahi Udasi Sadhus, Benares, as regards the appointment of a new mahant the custom is for the mahant for the time being to appoint a chosen disciple or chela, to succeed him on his death. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) DHARAM DASS v. SADHO PRAKASH. 40 I. C. 177.

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession.

The succession to the gadi of a mutt is governed by a custom and rules of the mutt which has to be proved in each case unless it is admitted by the opposite party. (Richards, C. J. and Sundar Lal, J.) GANGA RAM v. RAMSARAN. 34 I. C. 502.

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession—Rule of—Jurisdiction of Court—Successors.

The court cannot set aside the election made according to custom and has no right to nominate a successor to his successor. (Stanley, C. J. and Burkitt, J.) RAJBANS BHARTHI v. KARYA PHARTHI 10 I. ———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession—Appointment by head.

An appointment by the head of his successor though made according to usage is invalid if made as a compromise to gain a benefit or avoid a danger. Per Wallis, J.—Principles relating to family settlements do not govern cases like the appointment of head of mutt. Per Napier, J.—The appointment under a compromise is not necessarily bad but little defects in it may be cured if the appointment as a whole is in the interests of the institution. But where the appointment is made to avert a criminal prosecution of the head, it is bad. (Wallis, C. J. and Napier, J.) KAILASAM PILLAI v. NATARAJA TAMBIRAN. 40 I. C. 627= 32 M. L. J. 271. [Affirmed on appeal 57 I.C. 564=39 M. L. J. 98.]

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession—West Coast mutts.

Succession in the case of mutt is governed by the usage of the particular institution. Unlike the cast coast mutt the rule of succession in the west coast mutts, is generally based on the injunctions contained in the Smritis, i. e., to title to headship does not depend upon nomination by the head, nor on selection by the disciples but solely upon the length of the period during which a person has been a sanyasin. According to the established usage of the Naduvilai Mutt in Malabar, a sanyasi can become a member of the Mutt by the ordination of the head of the Mutt only which a junior swami cannot do. (Ayling and Napier, JJ.) NARAYANA BARATHIGAL v. ITTULUI AMMA. 39 I. C. 893.

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession.

There is no rule of law of succession to headships of mutts. A rule must be made out in each particular case. Where two mutts are affiliated to each other, the swami of one may have the right to appoint a successor if the swami of the latter dies without making the appointment himself. Such mutts are called dwandwa mutts and numerous instances of such appointment cannot be expected from the nature of things. In a mutt the existence of a custom regarding succession is rendered probable by the adoption of the same custom in similar matters in neighbouring mutts. (Abdur Rahim and Phillips, JJ.) RAGHUBHUSHANA v. VIDIBARIDHI. 34 I. C. 875.

———Religious endowment—Mutt—Succession—Election.

Where the plaintiff seeks the headship of a mutt as having been properly elected, he must definitely establish that it was the custom to elect for such office. The dictum in 27 Mad. 435 that in default of nomination, election falls to the disciples, applies only to Sanyas Mutts and not to the Parasamya Kolam Mutt of the Panch Brahmans. (*Wallis, C. Religious Endowment—Shebait.

———Religious endowment—Shebait—Properties acquired with income of debutter properties—Gir Gossains—Custom of removal by Punch.

Properties acquired by the shebait from the income of debutter properties and treated by the shebait as belonging to the idol become part of the debutter properties. According to the custom of Gir Gossains the Punch can dismiss any Gir Gossain for drinking wine or marrying or becoming addicted to vice, and appoint another in his place. A chela may, during the lifetime of his Guru, become a member of the Punch. Succession amongst Gir Gossains is governed by Gotia relationship and in the absence of a chela the nearest Gotia succeeds. ———Religious endowment—Shebait—Succession to office—Gossains—Custom—Panch—Nomination.

Succession to the office of shebait among Dasmani gossains governed by the rules of the community to which they belong. The ordinary rules of inheritance in their entirety could not apply to such persons, for although the succession is through Chelas, any question as to preference between Chelas (when it was not provided for by the Guru) might be decided by the usages of community and the representatives of the community were the proper persons to decide such matters. Although the secular property of a Guru might be inherited by the Chela succession to the office of shebait would be governed by the rites laid down by the erector of the endowment and in their absence by the Panch of the community who would naturally be the proper persons to decide the question what constituted grave offence or acts contrary to custom or usages of the family. If a member of the Panch is unable to attend on account of his illness or being on pilgrimage, the other members of the Panch could act. Amongst Gossains, if one dies, leaving no Chela, his nearest gotia succeeds him, the ascendant being preferred to descendant and if there are more than one gotia of the same class the guddinashi gotia is entitled to preference. Where the shebait was once removed from office the plff. gotia stepped into his place by virtue of his being nearest preferential gotia according to the rules of order and did not require the appointment by the Panch to the office of shebait. A shebait holds his office for life, but the entire estate is vested in him, though his power of alienation are qualified and restricted. The rule in the Tagore case is applicable to an hereditary endowment and the Hindu law of inheritance does not permit the creation of successive life estates in an endowment. When the founder has given valid directions as to the devolution of the shebaitship upon the death of the last shebait, the office vests in persons who at the time constitute the heirs of the founder provided the last shebait has not taken it absolutely. The rule that when a worship of thakoor has been founded the shebaitship vests in the heirs of the founders in default of evidence that he had disposed of it otherwise or of there being some evidence of usage, course of dealing or circumstances to show a different mode of devolution cannot be applied so as to vest the shebaitship in persons, who according to the usages of worship, cannot perform the rights of the office. 35 All. 283 (P. of puja to the image of the founder or his descendants, the founder's family members being pujaris restrictions on promiscuous entrance into the shrine and contributions by the members of the family do not necessarily militate against a public dedication. The law regulating members of a chit fund does not apply to a community who own the properties of a village temple, since it more resembles corporations whose law applies to it. Where a corporation consists of an indefinite number, the decision of the majority of the persons present binds the minority but where the number is definite only the major part of the whole number can bind the minority. This rule applies in India to fluctuating communities like the caste of a village. (Abdur Rahim and Napier, JJ.) YEGNARAMA DIKSHITAR v. GOPAL PATTAR.

———Religious endowment—Trustee—Temple—Rights of—General and particular trustees—Limitation—Adverse possession.

The endowment property may consist partly or wholly of a right to enjoy the revenues of property in the possession of the persons who have the right and the duty to manage such property, collect the income and hand it over when collected to be used in the proper manner for the purposes of the endowment. Such persons may even have certain rights of apportionment of the revenue so handed over by them. There may be a general trustee of the whole endowment including the revenues when so collected and handed over. But in such a case the general trustee is not entitled to possession of properties out of which that portion of the revenue came. His rights do not commence until after the collection of the revenues by those who are in possession. An idol may have not merely a general trustee but also other subordinate representatives having the right to manage certain special portions of the property and pay over the income so collected to the endowment and even to some degree control its use. Such rights are not inconsistent with the existence of a general trustee but they are fatal to his claim to possession of properties from which those revenues were derived. For purposes of limitation the possession of such subordinate representatives will be held to be adverse to that of the general trustee. (Lord Moulton). But the rules must not be inconsistent with or repugnant to the purpose of the endowment. Presumably the founder of an idol intends it and its worship to be perpetual. A rule therefore which authorised the shebait at his will and pleasure to alienate the dedicated property so as to starve the idol and its worship would be so repugnant to the whole purpose and object of the endowment that it could not be held to embody the original endower's intention. HINDU LAW—Religious Endowment—Trustee.

A trustee of a public trust has a first charge on the trust properties for the purpose of reimbursing himself for advances properly made for the trust. Art. 120 of the Limitation Act is the article applicable for the recovery of monies spent. His right to sue for such monies does not accrue before the date on which he is judicially declared to be no longer a lawful trustee or perhaps till he is dispossessed of the trust estate in pursuance of the judicial declaration. The expenses of a suit in which a person posing himself to be a trustee unsuccessfully resists another's right to be the trustee cannot be allowed as a proper charge on the trust property. Per Sadasiva Iyer, J.—A trustee has not only got a right to reimburse himself out of the rents and profits of the trust property, but has also a charge thereon including the corpus which can be enforced only by an order prohibiting any disposition of the trust property without previous payment of out of pocket expenses properly incurred by him. A person who is de facto trustee, but who bona fide thinks himself to be de jure trustee, is entitled to reimbursement of all expenses properly incurred by him just like a trustee de jure. Even a de facto trustee or a trustee de son tort is entitled to be reimbursed for all the necessary expenses. Of course, the accounts of such a trustee de son tort may be liable to be subjected to a more severe scrutiny than those of a lawful trustee. A trustee is entitled to remain in possession till he is reimbursed in respect of all proper charges incurred by him. Religious Office—Nature of Right.

———Religious office—Nature of right—Yajman Vritti.

Under Hindu Law the office of hereditary priest (yajman vritti) is a nibandha and is the hereditary right of immoveable property. The office of hereditary priest held in relation to a family, owes its origin, continuance and binding character to custom and not to a grant or agreement between the parties. In the case of the office of hereditary family priest, the mere fact that it had been created originally by the caste for the families belonging to it cannot affect it, as the office carries with it a hereditary right in the nature of property and the incumbent cannot be deprived of it by any one, if he has not become a Patita (outcaste) or has not declined to officiate. The caste makes a selection for the families of its members and when any family accepts the officiator as its hereditary family priest, custom annexes to the offices certain incidents in the nature of Civil rights as against the family, which cannot be annulled either by family or caste except for some offence under the Hindu Law committed by the officiator, or for refusal by officiator to discharge his duty as family priest. The transfer of a pala or turn of worshlp to a stranger not for pecuniary gain but to provide for the due performance of the pooja in the absence of a near heir, is the gift of the right and is valid. The transfer of offerings apart from immoveable property, is not valid and effective. Plaintiff's suit was for the possession of certain property as the reversioner of the last male owner who left a widow and a daughter who was married to the defendant and gave birth to a son. He survived both and the defendant was in possession of the property as his son's heir. The death of the son in the lifetime of the widow being an essential element to plaintiff's title, the burden of proof lies on him, (Karamat Husain and Chamier, JJ.) DILGAMJAN SINGH v. PARSIDH NARAIN SINGH. 11 I. Under the Hindu law, till the female owner dies, the reversionary right is a mere possibility or spes successionis. This possibility common to all the reversioners for it cannot be predicated who would be the nearest at the time of her death. A suit by a reversioner for a declaration of the invalidity of an alienation or adoption by a widow, has for its object the removal of a common apprehended injury to the interests of all the reversioners, presumptive and contingent alike. As a general rule, such a suit must be brought by the presumptive reversioner (i.e.,) the person who would succeed if the widow were to die that moment. There is nothing to preclude a remote reversioner from joining or asking to be joined in the action brought by the presumptive reversioner or even obtaining the conduct of the suit on proof of laches on the part of the plaintiff, or collusion between him and the widow or other female whose acts are impeached. It is the common injury to the reversionary rights which entitles the reversioners to sue. If in a suit therefore by the next presumptive reversioner for a declaration that an alienation or adoption by the widow is invalid, the sole plaintiff dies, the next presumable reversioner is entitled to be substituted for him and continue the suit. The decisions of the Madras High Court drawing a distinction between a suit to set aside an alienation, in this respect are incorrect. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) VENKATANARAYANA PILLAI v. SUBBAMMAL.

He has a right of election; he may choose to challenge one alienation and assent to another or he may challenge both or assent to both. He may exercise his right of election in regard to one alienation at one time and in regard to another alienation at another time. ———Reversioner—Rights of — One reversioner does not claim through another.

Alienation by widow is valid against every one, except the reversioners and unless the reversioners choose to treat it as a nullity, it subsists as against every one else. A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heir upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with; her alienation is not, therefore absolutely void but is voidable at the option of the reversioner. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure, treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any court, and he might show his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. Consequently a gift of the whole of her husband's property made by a Hindu widow not challenged by the reversioner during her lifetime and acquiesced in by those who would take a vested interest after her death cannot be challenged by any one else. The reversioners alone can dispute the gift. If they choose to allow the property to which they are entitled, to remain in possession of the donee, that is their affair and no one else can object. If the donee remains in possession under a claim of right for 12 years he will acquire an indefeasible title even against the reversioner. *(Miller, C. The law of succession is the personal law of the individual whose succession is in question. If it is known that he lived in a certain place, it will be assumed that his personal law is the law that prevails in that place. But if it is known that he originally belonged to some other place from whence he has migrated to another place, his personal law would be the law of the place of his original residence as it was when he left, unless it can be shown that he has renounced his original law in favour of the law of the place to which he migrated. ———Stridhanam — Succession — Unmarried woman—Prostitution—Effect of.

The Mitakshara law recognises two forms of descent to a Hindu woman's self-acquired property according as whether she is married or unmarried. It is not the law that when an unmarried woman has fallen from chastity no one can succeed to her property except the Crown. The mother of the woman would be an heir. In the case of Hindu widows who have become prostitutes, the succession to their stridhanam is regulated by the same rules as those which apply to the succession of married women. HINDU LAW—Stridhanam—Succession.

———Stridhanam — Succession — Dayabhaga— Half sister's son—Daughter's son of great grandson of great grandfather of woman's husband.

Under the Dayabhaga school a woman's half sister's son is entitled to succeed to her stridhan in preference to the daughter's son of the great-grandson of the grand-father of the woman's husband. (Brett and N. R. Chatterjee, JJ.) SASHI BHUSAN LAHIRI v. RAJENDRA NATH JOARDAR.
40 Cal. 82=15 I. C. 225=16 C. W. N. 1094.

———Stridhanam—Succession—Preference.

Under the Mitakshara Law a woman's father's brother's sons are not entitled to claim her stridhanam property in preference to her father's daughter's son. (Chitty and Chatterjee, JJ.) DWARKA NATH RAY v. SARAT CHANDRA SINGH RAY. 39 Cal. 319=15 C. W. N. 1036=11 I. C. 872=15 C. L. J. 23.

———Stridhanam—Succession—Prostitution.

Though property held absolutely by a prostitute is not stridhanam in the exact contemplation of the Dayabhaga, the operation of which is confined to married women, it must be treated as Stridhan for purposes of succession. Prostitution severs a woman so far as inheritance is concerned from all her relations at the moment she becomes degraded and necessarily also from all persons claiming through them. Sons and chaste daughters born after degradation are not affected by this rule and inherit her absolute property according to general rules of Hindu Law. (Stephen, J.) TRIPURA CHARAN v. HARI MATI DAS.

———Stridhanam— Succession— Sister's son v. Husband's daughter's son's son.

The word "sapinda" in chapter II, placitum 11 of the Mitakshara is not confined to gotraja sapindas but is used in the generic sense of relationship by blood. Under the Mitakshara Law the sister's son of a woman married in the orthodox form who dies leaving no issue cannot claim the stridhanam property in preference to the husband's daughter's son's son. The persons entitled to succeed are those who would succeed to the property if the property belonged to the husband. 36 Mad. 116; 37 Mad. 293; 36 Mad. 45, Rel. ———Stridhanam—Succession—Maiden's property —Father's paternal uncle's son and father's sister.

A father's paternal uncle's son is entitled to succeed in preference to a father's sister to the stridhanam property of a maiden. 38 Mad. 45; 32 Bom. 409; 39 Cal. 319, Ref. ———Stridhanam — Succession — Crown, when succeeds.

The stridhanam of a Hindu woman, married in the approved form, and dying issueless, devolves on her husband and failing him, on his sapindas according to the rule of succession to the property of a male. On failure of the husband's sapindas the widow's blood relations would succeed to the exclusion of the crown. As between the mother and brother, the mother is the preferential heir. A brother's widow, though a gotraja sapinda is not entitled to succeed as heir under the Madras system of inheritance. (White, C. J. and Sankaran Nair, J.) KANAKAMMAL v. ANANTHAMATHI AMMAL. 25 I. C. 901=37 Mad. 293.

———Stridhanam —Succession—Custom — Agambadia caste.

According to custom in Agambadia caste the stridhanam property of a widow without issue, goes to her parents in preference to the husband's kindred. (Sankaran Nair and Ayling, JJ.) VELLAICHAMI SERVAI v. MAMUNDI SERVAI. 23 I. C. 124.

———Stridhanam— Succession—Married woman deserting husband—Daughter's daughter and illegitimate son.

A daughter of a married woman born before her desertion of her husband does not cease to be so after the mother's degradation and expulsion from caste. The daughter of such a daughter is entitled to succeed to the stridhanam of the degraded woman in preference to her illegitimate sons. Illegitimacy or degradation cannot be treated as a ground of preference. Nor can legitimacy place a person in a worse position. ———Stridhanam—Succession—Maiden's property —Step brother and maternal aunt—Preferential heir —"Sapinda", meaning of.

A step mother is entitled to succeed to a maiden's stridhanam in preference to the maternal aunt. The sapindas both of the father and the mother in the text of the Mitakshara refer to the same persons as the mother becomes a member of the father's family on marriage. 36 Bom. 339; 32 Bom. 490; 39 Cal. 319, Foll. The rule that Gotraja sapindas do not inherit as agnate relations taking the rank which they would be entitled to if their claims were based on Sapinda relationship has been enforced with regard to succession to male's property, 18 Mad. 168; 19 Mad. 35, Ref. HINDU LAW—Stridhanam—Succession.

———Stridhanam—Succession—Daughter — Post-nuptial gift—Devolution—Mitakshara—Mayukha.

In a post-nuptial gift made by a father to a daughter in Berar, the property gifted with its accretion becomes her anvadheyak stridhanam and on her death her son and daughter surviving her inherit equally. In Berar wherever the Mitakshara and Mayukha differ, the latter predominates. 4 N. L. R. 31; 5 N. L. R. 13; 9 N. L. R. 102; 10 N. L. R. 24 followed (Kotval, A. J. C.) SHRIRAM v. RAJA RAM.

———Stridhanam — Succession — Unmarried female—Sister.

An unmarried woman is treated as analogous to a childless woman married in a disapproved form and the succession in both cases is confined to the father's family. Consequently a sister has a preference to inherit, to any descendant of a paternal ancestor. 36 B. 339; 43 M. 32; 14 N. L. R. 84 Ref. (Drake Brockman, J. C.) MADHO v. SAMPAT. 69 I. ———Stridhanam—Succession—Daughter's estate—Mode of devolution—Berar—Mitakshara.

In Berar a Hindu daughter inheriting from her father takes an absolute estate. In Maharashtra and Berar where the Mitakshara is paramount and the Mayukha of secondary importance, the inheritance to non-techical stridhan would devolve on the death of the daughter on (1) Unmarried daughter, (2) Married Daughter who is "unprovided for" (3) Married daughter who is "provided for" (4) Daughter's daughter, (5) Daughter's son, (6) son, (7) Son's son. 14 B. 612; 31 B 453; 6 B. ———Stridhanam—Succession—Form of marriage—Gains of prostitution.

In the absence of all male gotrajas belonging to a childless widow's deceased husband's line his son's widow inherits the childless widow's stridhanam. A woman whose issue predeceased her is in the same category, so far as devolution of property is concerned, as one who never bore a child. A husband and his heirs cannot inherit property obtained by his wife by means of prostitution. The succession to the stridhanam of a childless Hindu married woman depends on the form of the woman's marriage. If the marriage was on the Brahma form the husband and his heirs completely exclude the blood relations but if it was in the Asura form he and they are as completely excluded by the latter. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) CHANDRA BHAGA v. VISWANATH. 20 I. C. 557=9 N. L. R. 102.

———Stridhanam—Succession—Prostitution.

Property acquired by a Hindu widow by prostitution descends to her illegitimate child and not to the members of her husband's family upon whom the widow had no claims whatever after she began to live with her paramour. The son is a preferential heir to a son's son in respect of the non-technical stridhan of a Hindu female governed by Mayukha. ———Stridhanam—What is not—Daughter's estate—Income of.

The income of the estate in possession of daughters is not necessarily joint property, nor stridhanam, but it will go to the natural heirs of the daughters under Hindu Law. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) SITHARAM v. DULAM KUAR. 41 All 350=50 I. C. 372=17 A. L. J. 337.

———Stridhanam—What is not—Savings by a Hindu widow—Whether part of estate of the husband.

Savings by a Hindu widow from her husband's estate are regarded as a part of such estate if they are not disposed of in any way by the widow. The nature of the savings and the intention of the widow should be taken into consideration in deciding whether such savings will follow the estate of the husband. The true test is to determine whether the savings were treated by the widow as a temporary saving to be applied at a subsequent time for her own use or whether she treated the same as a part of estate; whether the sum could be regarded as an accumulation or a mere saving for personal use. Where a Howdah which was a part of a widow's husband's estate, was sold and repurchased by her, the inference must be that she treated it as a part of her husband's estate. Rents not realised from tenants by a widow are not in the nature of savings for personal use but form part of the estate of the husband. (Mookerjee and Caspersz, JJ.) BHAGABATI KOER V. A yathi is a Bikshu, a sanyasi, an ascetic of anchorite so that a Brahmin living in the very heart of Calcutta and earning money by pujas not taking up the danda or wearing red cloths but wearing leather shoes and depositing money in Marwari firms for interest and purchasing porperties in his village is not a yathi. The virtuous pupil or sat-sishya takes the property of a yati or ascetic. A chela is a personal attendant who may be raised to the rank of a sishya. A sat-sishya is one who is assiduous in the study of theology in relation to the holy science and practising its ordinances. Succession—Bandhus.

———Succession — Bandhus — Maternal aunt's grandson and maternal uncle.

The enumeration of bandhus in the Mitakshara is merely illustrative of what the three classes (Atma bandhus, Pithru bandhus and Matru bandhus) severally mean as several important bandhus as the maternal uncle and sister's son are omitted. The Atma bandhus come first, the Pithru bandhus come next and the Matru bandhus come last. In the absence of any express authority varying the rule the propositions enunciated in Mullusami v. Muttukumarasami, (1893) 16 Mad. 23, at p. 30 which on appeal was affirmed by the judicial committee in (1896) 19 Mad. 405, furnish a safe guide. The rule that bandhus ex-parte paterna succeed in preference to those ex-parte materna has nothing to do with the members of the same class inter se. It only explains why pithru bandhus are to be preferred to matru bandhus. Amongst bandhus of the same class nearness of degree and capacity to confer spiritual benefit upon the deceased and his ancestors determine the preferential right to succeed. Where on the death of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school, the contesting claimants to his estates were the deceased paternal aunt's grandson and his maternal uncle, the maternal uncle has a preferential right to succeed as against the paternal aunt's grandson on the ground that although both are atma bandhus the maternal uncle is nearer in degree to the deceased and offers oblations to his own father and grandfather to whom it was the duty of the deceased to offer pinda. The paternal aunt's grandson cannot offer any pinda to the deceased's ancestors. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) VEDACHALA MUDALIAR v. SUBRAMANIA MUDALIAR.

———Succession—Bandhus—Order of succession.

In Mitakshara, there are three kinds of Bandhus —Atma bandhus, Pitru bandhus and Matru bandhus and they succeed in the order given above. A bandhu, in order to be heritable in a female line, must fall within fifth degree from the common male ancestor and he and the deceased must be Sapindas of each other. A mother's sister's grandson being an atma bandhu is preferred to a mother's paternal aunt's son being a matru bandhu. (Sir John Edge.) ADIT NARAYAN SINGH v. MAHABIR PRASAD TIWARI.

———Succession — Bandhus — Mitakshara — Limits of heritable bandhus.

The word "bandhu" in the Mitakshara system has a distinct and technical meaning and signifies the bhinna ghotra sapindas. The limitation of sapinda relationship laid down in the Achara Kanda of the Mitakshara is not confined to prohibition in respect of marriage impurity and exequial rites only but applies also to inheritance. 2 Bom. 388, 426; 6 Cal. 199 and 22 Cal. 339, Ref. ———Succession—Bandhus—Sister's daughter—Son's daughter's son—Priority—Bombay school.

According to Hindu law, among bandhus, the son's daughter's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the sister's daughter. Per Macleod, C. J.—Though it may be thought that the Bombay High Court in deciding that all male bandhus should be preferred to female bandhus without regard to propinquity has gone too far, still there is no authority for the proposition that bandhus of different sex but of equal propinquity should take equally. Per Shah, J.—The list of bandhus given in the Mitakshara is merely illustrative and not exhaustive; nor does the list necessarily indicate anything more than this that the atma bandhus have to be preferred to pitri bandhus and that the pitri bandhus are to be preferred to the matri bandhus. Among bandhus, a sister's daughter is entitled to preference over the sister's son's son for the purposes of inheritance. In the Bombay Presidency a sister would be perferred to a son's daughter.

Though Balambhatti is useful as aiding the interpretation of the Mitakshara the views propounded therein cannot be accepted without due caution and examination. (Macleod, C.J. and Shah, J.) DATTATRAYA BHIMRAO SABNIS v. GANGABAI GANESHBHAT. 46 Bom. 541=24 Bom. L. R. 69= 1922 Bom. 321.

———Succession — Bandhus — Benares School—Sister's son and father's sister's son.

The general principle about the succession of the bandhus under the Benares School of Hindu Law is that the nearer in consanguinity excludes the more remote and that under the Mitakshara at least, the order of succession does not follow religious efficacy. A sister's son therefore is superior to the father's sister's son though both are atma bandhus or cognates of the propositus. The position of a step-sister's son cannot be distinguished from that of a sister's son in the line of heirs. ———Succession—Convert—Succession Act X of 1865, S. 2.

A person who ceases to be a Hindu in religion and becomes a Christian cannot elect to be bound by the Hindu Law in the matter of succession, after the passing of the Indian Succession Act. A Hindu convert to Christianity is now governed solely by the Succession Act. (Lord Shaw.) KAMAWATI v. DIGBIJAI SINGH. 30 M. L. T. 47=(1922) M.W.N. 336= 15 L.W. 1=42 M.L.J. 87=24 Bom.L.R. 626= L. Succession—Crown.

———Succession—Crown—Claim by escheat—Burden of proof.

Where on the death of a Hindu widow, the crown claims the property by escheat, owing to the failure of husband's heirs, the crown must show that the property had vested in her husband. There is no presumption of law to that effect resulting from the husband's estate at his death being shown to be considerable and the widow's title not being shown to have otherwise accrued. 26 Cal. 871, Ref. Succession—Dancing Girls.

———Succession—Dancing girl's sons and daughters get equal shares.

There is a custom in the caste of dancing girls by which sons and daughters share the inheritance equally, contrary to ordinary Hindu Law. (Schwabe, C. J. and Coleridge, JJ.) BERA CHANDRAMMA v. CHANDRAM NAGANNA. (1923) M. W. N. 567=18 L. W. 309= 45 M. L. J. 228=1924 Mad. 94.

———Succession—Dancing girls—Preference of daughters to sons.

Among dancing girls it is a settled rule of law that daughters succeed in preference to sons. The property of a dancing girl goes to the daughter's daughter in preference to the son, its devolution being similar to that of Stridhanam. (Bakewell and Phillips, JJ.) NAGALINGAM PILLAI v. VADUGANATHA. 45 I. C. 672=24 M. L. T. 81.

———Succession—Dancing girls—Preference.

According to the caste custom among the dancing girls, females are preferred to males. Hence mother's father's brother's daughter is a preferable heir to the mother's father's brother's daughter's son. 5 M. H. C. R. 161; 11 Mad. 393; ———Succession—Dancing girls—Prostitution—Effect.

Succession among dancing girls is regulated by custom. Such custom is not immoral because it regulates the rights of property among dancing girls. Prostitution does not sever the tie of kinship and the Hindu Law does not become inapplicable to her. Per Seshagiri Iyer, J.—7 Ben. Sud. Diw. Ada. Rep. 273; 2 M. H. C. R. 196, Dist.; 31 Cal. 11 (P. Immorality on the part of a Hindu woman does not sever the tie of blood relationship and there is no rule of Hindu Law which would prevent the blood relations succeeding to her property on her death. Insanity to be a ground of exclusion from inheritance need not be congenital. The right of a member of a joint Hindu family to share in family property comes into existence at birth and subsists all through, although it is incapable of enforcement at the time of partition because of the disqualification then existing. Leprosy if not of a virulent type is not a ground of exclusion from inheritance. Incurable tumour in the nasal cavity is not a ground of exclusion. ———Succession—Exclusion from—Unchastity—Hostility.

Under the Hindu Law, unchastity disqualifies a Hindu wife from succeeding to her husband's estate but it must be physical unchastity which occurred during the lifetime of the husband. In the absence of unchastity there must be malignant or unjustified hostility on the part of the wife to exclude her. (Pipon, J. C.) MT. MUKANDI BAI v. JAMNI BAI. 73 I. C. 875.

———Succession—Exclusion from—Obstructed and unobstructed heritage.

Under the Mitakshara (which is the paramount Hindu Law authority in Sind) the disqualifications relating to 'exclusion from heritance' apply both to cases of obstructed and unobstructed heritage. In the case of the latter, in joint family property, they must apply at the time of birth, for that is the time when the rights would accrue, if there were no disabilities. Otherwise there would be a divestment of rights already vested, which is contrary to the general principles of Hindu Law. Subsequent lunacy could not divest the plaintiff of his right to the joint family property. (Fawcett, Crouch and Pratt, A. J. Cs.) HOTCHAND v. MANGHANMAL. 29 I. C. 42=8 S. L. R. 279.

The rule as to females inheriting property in the Bombay Presidency is that they take it

In the order of succession a female gotraja sapinda is postponed to all male gotraja sapindas in the same line as her husband but she has precedence over a male in a remoter line. Each line of sapindas leaving aside lineal descendants of the propositus includes all males within the limits of gotraja relationship lineally descended from the same ancestor common to them and the propositus, e.g., the grandfather's line and the great-grandfather's line. ———Succession—Illegitimate son—Bengal school—Dasi, meaning—Dayabhaga, Chap. IX, para 29.

Per curiam (Chatterjee, J., contra.)—Under the Bengal School, an illegitimate son has a right to inherit as Dasiputra provided his mother was in the absolute keeping of his father and the son was not the fruit of adulterous or incestuous intercourse. His mother need not be a 'slave woman' in the true sense of the term nor need there be a marriage between the parties. 1 Cal. 1 and 19 Cal. 91 dissented from. 'Dasi' does not necessarily mean a slave woman but includes a Sudra woman kept as concubine. According to the correct interpretation of Chap. IX, para 29 of the Dayabhaga, a 'daryadi Sudra putra' includes a son of a dasa and not necessarily the son of a 'dasi' (wife of a slave). The term 'Aparinita' in Chap IX para. 29 of the Dayabhaga means not 'a maiden' but 'not married to the Sudra to whom she bears a son.' Per Chatterjee, J.—The right of an illegitimate son to inherit which has not been recognised in Bengal for more than a century should not be revived though it is deducible from the texts of Jimutavahana or any other authority, as it is opposed to usage and the sentiments of the people of Bengal. Succession—Sapindas.

———Succession—Sapindas — Preference—Collaterals—Grandson of great-grandfather and great grandson of grandfather—Preference—Mitakshara—Smriti Chandrika.

Under the Mitakshara Ch. II, S. 5, Cls. 4 and 5 the great grandson of the grandfather of a deceased person, is entitled to inherit in preference to the grandson of the great-grandfather. The word "putra" used in connection with brothers and uncles in Ch. II, S. 5 of the Mitakshara must be understood in generic sense (as in the case of lineal descendants of the deceased) and the three successive descendants in each ascending line up to the fixed limit, should be exhausted before making the ascent into the line next in order of succession. Under the Mitakshara while the right of inheritance arises from sapinda relationship or community of blood (in contradistinction to the Dayabhaga notion of community in the offering of religious oblations) in judging the nearness of blood relationship, or propinquity among the gotrajas, the test to be applied is the capacity to offer funeral oblations. 41 I. A. 290; 7 I. A. 212; 16 Bom. 716; 2 M. I. A. 132; 13 M. I. A. 373; 24 All. 128; 16 Bom. 716, Ref. to. 5 Mad. 291; 35 Mad. 152 Disappr. The opinions of Devanna Bhatta and Viswesvara Bhatta in the Smriti Chandrika and Subodhini respectively, that the Mitakshara must be taken to limit collateral descent to two degrees in each line, are against the preponderance of authority and cannot be accepted. According to the scheme of succession propounded by the Mitakshara, the lineal descendants of the deceased owner down to and including the third degree who constitute the first class of near relations (the nearest sapindas) inherit in succession in the first instance. In their default, the widow and daughter take by express provision of the law. Similarly the daughter's son comes next. In their absence the inheritance ascends; each ascending line begins with a female and each has to be exhausted in accordance with the rule of nearness of sapinda relationship before the next in order can take; so that the parents "their three successive descendants" take first, then parental grandfather and parental grandmother and the parental grandfather and their three successive descendants come next and so on. HINDU LAW—Succession—Sapindas.

———Succession—Sapindas—Mitakshara.

Sapinda relationship according to the Mitakshara is not based on the presentation of funeral oblations but on descent from a common ancestor, and in the case of females, also on marriage with descendants from a common ancestor. There is a limitation to this relationship laid down by the Mitakshara (Achara Kanda) (i.e.,) it ceases after the seventh ancestor on the father's side and the fifth ancestor on the mother's side. This limitation is not confined to prohibition in respect of marriage, impurity and exequial rites only but applies also to inheritance. Succession to collaterals by brothers forming a joint family does not impose the incident of survivorship on such property, since they become tenants-in-common. (Lindsay, J. C. and Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.) HARDWAR v. RAM MILLAN. 20 O. C. 271 = 42 I. C. 812 = 4 O. L. J. 565.

———Succession—Survivorship—Joint family—Benares school.

Under the Benares school of Hindu law, the rule of succession in a joint family is one of survivorship where no member has any definite or defined share and therefore cannot transmit it to his heirs. But a member, who dies or ceases to be a member of the family, causes no change in the status of the family. The properties owned by the joint family continue to be owned by the surviving members thereof after the extinction of one member of it. Succession—Widow.

———Succession—Widow—Nature of estate.

Succession to the estate of a deceased Hindu whose estate had passed to his widow opens out on death of the widow and the person who would have succeeded to the estate of the deceased had he died on the date of widow's death takes the estate. A widow succeeds to her husband's estate as the surviving portion of her husband. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) SITARAM v. LAXMAN. 17 I. C. 133=8 N. L. R. 128.

———Succession—Widow—Nature of estate.

When on a sale of full proprietary rights in estate by a widow a right of occupancy is created, succession to such right is governed by the personal law. A Hindu widow has no higher title in respect of ex-proprietary rights than in full proprietary rights, the former not being her stridhanam. (Stuart, A. J. C.) GENDA SINGH v. FATEH SINGH. 18 O. Widow—Accumulations.

———Widow—Accumulations—Arrears of maintenance—Presumption.

A Hindu widow may so dispose of the income of her husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus. It may be there is a presumption against her so dealing with it. It is a question of fact if there is a dispute, whether she has or has not dealt with her property. If she has so dealt with it, her husband's reversioner is her legal representative. (Lord Phillimore.) RAJA RAJESWARI DIRA v. SUNDARA PANDYA SWAMI TEVAR. 10 L. W. 322=42 Mad. 58=17 A. L. J. 153=36 M. L. J. 164=23 C. W. N. 549=29 C. L. J. 551=25 M. L. T. 400=21 Bom. L. R. 885=49 I. C. 704=(1919) M. W. N. 511 (P.C.).

———Widow—Accumulations — Savings from income and purchases from savings.

It is always a question of fact whether the purchases from savings from income are accretions to the estate. If out of the savings, the widow purchases in her own name the property of her own brothers which was sold in execution, and soon after reconveys it to them, there is no doubt that there is no intention on the part of the widow that the property should be an accretion to the ancestral property, 10 Cal. 324; 20 Cal. 433 (P.C.) and 25 Mad. 351 Ref. to. Money belonging to a Hindu were after his death invested by his relations on thavanai with a direction to pay the widow of the deceased a sum of Rs. 50 a year for her maintenance. The money together with the accumulated interest was intended to go to the boy to be adopted by the widow. The widow made no adoption nor did she object to the deposit and lay any claim to the money or to the whole of the interest payable each year. Held, that the accumulated interest formed part of the estate of the deceased and that the principal together with the interest passed on the widow's death to the reversioners of her deceased husband. HINDU LAW—Widow—Acquisitions.

———Widow—Accumulations—Debts not collected by widow.

Where a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate does not collect a mortgage debt due to her during her life-time, it becomes an accretion to the estate. (Daniels and Lyle, A. J. Cs.). SAIYED MAHOMED HADI v. MT. PARBATI. 9 O. L. J. 312=25 O. C. 2=1922 Oudh 91.

———Widow—Accumulations—Accretion—Assets.

The question whether a Hindu widow dealt with the accumulated income of her deceased husband's estate so as to make it a part of the corpus depends on the circumstances of each case. Where a Hindu widow had mortgaged with possession her husband's estate but on her death her reversioners took possession of the properties and realised the rents that had accrued due during the widow's lifetime, the moneys so realised are assets of the widow in the hands of the reversioners and are liable to satisfy the claim of the mortgagees. If a Hindu widow in possession in lieu of maintenance saves a portion of the profits which she could have spent on her maintenance, the savings are her personal property and in the absence of a clear indication of intention to the contrary the savings would go to her legal representatives. If a Hindu widow invests the income of the estate in such a way as to indicate her intention it was not to form part of her husband's estate but to remain at her disposal even though the investment be of a temporary nature, it is her separate property. The fact that she first mortgaged and then gifted the acquisition would show she intended to deal with it as her own. (Richards, C. J. and Tudball, J.) WAHID ALI KHAN v. TORI RAM. 21 I. ———Widow — Acquisitions — Presumptions — Purchase in the name of daughter—Intention —Suit by reversioner—Onus.

Where a limited owner like a widow acquires properties out of the income of her husband's estate, the presumption is that the acquisitions are impressed with the same character as the funds employed for their acquisition. The mere fact that the acquisition is made by the widow in the name of her daughter does not rebut the presumption. In considering whether the acquisition was intended to be a gift to the daughter, one important test is the character of the possession of the properties (i. e.) whether they were in the possession of the widow or in the exclusive possession of her daughter. 6 M. Although in ordinary cases there is no presumption that purchases by a widow out of the income from her husband's estate form part of the estate yet where husband's property is brought to sale in execution of decree against the widow and re-purchased by the widow herself such presumption would arise when the husband's property yields a substantial income. husband's even when she is unable to explain how she came by it and even again when it is known that he died leaving considerable property. (Chitty and N. Chatterjee, JJ.) JADU NATH v. RAM NARAIN.
11 I. C. 434.

———Widow—Acquisitions—Nature of.

As pointed out in 28 Mad. 1 there is no necessary connection between the limited nature of the estate which a widow takes in her husband's property and the interest accruing to her in the income derived by her as such limited owner. That which becomes vested in her own right and which she can dispose of at pleasure is her own property, not limited but absolute, exclusive and separate in every sense of the term and devolves as such. There is no presumption that savings or purchases with savings effected by a widow are increments to the corpus of the husband's estate and pass together with it. (Scott Smith and Brasher, JJ.) MT. MALAN v. KISHORE CHAND.
1923 Lah. 17.

———Widow—Acquisitions—Property acquired by widow.

Intention of the widow is the test to determine whether the property brought from the income of her husband's estate is her absolute estate or an accretion to her husband's property. (Shadi Lal, J.) CHELA RAM v. ISHAR DAS. 32 I. C. 831=
41 P. W. R. 1916.

———Widow—Acquisitions—Accretion to estate—Income of property.

A Hindu widow has absolute control over the income of the property which she inherits from her husband subject of course to the payment of the debts left by him and unless it can be shown that she intended to make the savings part of the estate of her husband, she would have full power of disposal over it. Where the estate is under litigation and the income of the estate is being deposited in court subject to the result of the suit which the widow has filed, there is nothing to raise any presumption that she intended the income to be an accretion to the estate. If she clearly wants to treat the property as property over which she had absolute dominion the fact that she purported to deal with properties to which she had no such right along with properties over which she had a right of disposal, would not indicate an intention on her part to treat one as an accretion to the other. That she purported to act beyond her powers as regards some of the items cannot defeat her right to dispose of items over which she had absolute disposing power. (*Schwabe, C. ———Widow—Acquisitions—Money paid for maintenance.

The next reversioner of a Hindu can successfully bring a suit against a trustee to recover a certain sum with interest deposited with him for the deceased widow's maintenance, by the family members of the deceased; even if the widow did not claim it. The widow's silence amounts to an acquiescence in the interest being treated as part of her husband's estate. The suit is governed by Art. 60 of the Limitation Act, as the interest is an increment to the deposit according to the agreement of the parties. (*Wallis, C. ———Widow — Acquisitions — Income of her husband's estate—Accretion.

A Hindu widow has full power to dispose of the income of her husband's estate as it accrues. A widow has full power during her lifetime to invest or otherwise dispose of accumulated income accruing during her possession of a widow's estate there is no reason why a widow should be precluded from exercising an act of appropriation with regard to property to which she has established her title and which is being wrongfully withheld with her by a person in unlawful possession of it. Where there is a manifestation of the widow's intention to appropriate the income from her husband's estate it is sufficient to prevent its passing as part of her husband's estate. 10 I. A Hindu died leaving a widow, four daughters and a son who also died. A litigation that ensued between the widow and the daughters and the nearest male reversioners was compromised, the widow surrendering all right over the immoveable property, half of it being given to the daughters who were to abandon their rights under the will of their father, the other half of it going to the reversioner, the widow getting absolutely all the moveable property and small portions of land for maintenance. After the death of that reversioner who was a party to the compromise the other reversioners instituted a suit to have the compromise declared invalid and ineffectual on the ground that the surrender by the widow was a partial one and a device to divide the estate with the reversioners. Held, that the arrangements were not a device to divide the estate as they were in pursuance of a bona fide compromise in respect of rights sought to be litigated in the prior suit. The surrender merely recognised the widow's absolute right over moveables conferred on her by the Mithila Law was not bad as being partial one. ———Widow—Compromise—Binding on reversion—Collusion—Onus.

A Hindu is entitled to avoid the expenses of litigation and to compromise a bona fide claim against the estate if the compromise is made for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the widow. If the reversioners seek to set aside such a compromise, the burden is on them to show that the compromise was entered into by the widow collusively for the purpose of conferring upon herself a benefit at the expense of the estate. ———Widow—Decree against—Ex-parte—How far binding on the reversioners.

A decree fairly and properly obtained against a widow is binding on the reversioners, even though the suit was not contested by the widow. There is no law by which a plaintiff can force a widow to contest his claim. Therefore to hold that a decree fairly and honestly obtained by a plaintiff is not binding on a reversioner unless it was actually contested by the widow, is to cast upon the plaintiff a duty impossible to perform. Though a decree fairly and properly obtained against a widow in possession of her husband's estate binds the reversioners a decree following an award in which the widow did not properly represent the estate but was looking after her own interest, would not bind them. (Richards C. J. and Banerji, J.) BALAKDHAR DUBE v. RAMANAND SHUKAL. 14 I. C. 125 = 9 A. L. J. 778.

———Widow—Decree against—Mortgage right—Usufructuary Mortgage—Execution sale—Rights of reversioner.

An usufructuary mortgage right vested in a Hindu widow as heir of her husband is not immoveable property. If the mortgage is redeemed during the widow's life time and the widow spent the money, as she would be entitled to do, the reversioner could not claim against the party redeeming to be again put in possession of the property until redeemed a second time. The mere fact that the widow was in possession as mortgagee would not cause those mortgage rights to be treated in law as immoveable property, as all that the widow was entitled to was to retain possession of the property as security for the debt until she was redeemed. Consequently mortgage rights vested in the widow represent movable property and could be sold in execution of a decree against her irrespective of any question of legal necessity. (*Macleod, C. ———Widow — Decree against — Reversioner bound.

———Widow—Decree against—When binding on reversioner.

A decree against a widow should state specifically whether the decree is a personal decree or one against the estate. In interpreting the decree the frame of the plaint ought to be gone into. If the suit is brought against the widow on a cause of action personal to herself then the decree and the execution sale will pass only the right, title and interest of the widow. ———Widow—Decree against—When binding on estate.

Where the suit is founded upon a purely personal debt or contract of a Hindu woman with a limited interest in the estate, the estate is not bound to satisfy that debt. The suit to bind the estate should be so framed as to show that it is not merely a personal demand on the female in possession but that it is intended to bind the entire estate and the interest of all those who come after her. The decree-holder can prove necessity in execution proceedings so as to bind the whole estate by the sale. (Sharfuddin and Coxe, JJ.) GAJADHAR PERSHAD SAHU v. BINDUBASHINI PERSHAD. 29 I. C. 181.

———Widow—Decree against—Execution sale—What passes.

The test to see what passes on a sale in execution of a decree against a widow is to see from the records the amount of the purchase money and the conduct of the parties and whether the proceedings were directed against the widow personally or against the whole reversion. The joining of the reversioner as a party is a clear indication of the intention to bind the estate. (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) RAMESWAR MANDAL v. PROVABATI DEBI. 20 C. L. J. 23= 25 I. ———Widow—Decree against—Rent — Execution Sale—What passes.

Unless and until a landlord brings the holding itself to sale for arrears accrued after the death of its full owner who is succeeded by a widow in enjoyment, the liability for rent is personal to her and not attaching to the reversion. Even assuming a decree against a widow on the basis of a transaction beneficial to the estate can be enforced against the inheritance, a personal degree against her on a liability which cannot be directly or indirectly imposed by her on the inheritance, as being neither for legal necessity nor for the benefit of the estate cannot be executed against the estate in the hands of the reversioner. Where a Hindu widow to whom letters of administration have been granted, mortgages properties, it is not a case of advancing money having regard to legal necessity but merely upon the leave granted by the court to mortgage the property. Having regard to the sanction granted by the Probate Court a person has not to enquire as regards the necessity for such advance. If he bona fide relied upon the order and made an advance, there is no onus on him to make enquiries about the truth of the allegations on which sanction was given. HINDU LAW—Widow—Powers of.

———Widow—Powers of—Disposition by will—Moveables.

A Hindu widow can, with the consent of the next reversioners, transfer inter vivos the estate inherited by her giving an absolute title to the transferee; she cannot even with their consent bequeath the estate by a will, 2 M. L. T. 1; 12 C. W. N. 74; 5 A. L. J. 1, Ref. In Bombay the current of decisions is in favour of the Hindu widow's absolute power of disposal over moveables inherited by her, but in Bengal the widow's power of disposal of moveable and immoveable properties inherited by her is the same. The mere fact that there are no reversioners or that the Crown or other reversioner does not claim the estate does not confer on the widow an absolute interest which she can bequeath by will. 8 M. I. A. 500, Ref. (Coxe, J.) JANARDAN v. ANU RAM. 10 I. C. 51.

———Widow—Powers of.

A widow who became absolute owner of the property under her husband's will has pawer to dispose of it as she pleased as she was not restricted by what was stated about her selling it and having a dharmsala built, which was nothing more than the expression of a wish on the part of her husband which she was not under any legal obligation to carry out. It is not correct to say that because by the will the widow was authorised to adopt a son she would take the property as absolute owner only in the contingency of her not adopting. Widow—Surrender.

———Widow—Surrender—Receipt of maintenance in lieu of estate—Effect.

A Hindu widow can renounce her estate in favour of the next reversioner and voluntarily efface herself from the succession as effectually as if she had then died, and this voluntary self-effacement may be effected by any process having the effect of a surrender, relinquishment or abandonment provided it is a bona fide and is of the whole property. The receipt of maintenance in lieu of her estate amounts to a complete renunciation of the estate, (Viscount Cave.) BHAGWAT KOER v. DHANUKDHARI PRASAD SINGH. 59 I. C. 445 = 12 L. W. 105 (P.C.)

HINDU LAW—Widow—Surrender.

———Widow—Surrender—Provision for maintenance—Effect of—Form of surrender, immaterial—Effect of.

A Hindu widow can renounce or relinquish her interest in her husband's estate and by this voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. Such effacement can be effected by any process whereby there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. The stipulation of a provision for the future maintenance of the widow does not vitiate the surrender. 46 I. A. 72, Ref. Where, therefore, a widow and her husband's brother's son disputed the right to succeed to the properties of her husband, the one asserting and the other denying a division in status, a compromise was arrived at on the footing not that the widow had any right and surrendered it, but on the footing that she had no right to the properties. The widow was given a sum of money for her future maintenance. The arrangement was acted upon by the parties for 30 years. Held that the effect of the transaction was a complete relinquishment by the widow of the estate to the nephew then the next reversioner and that it was valid. (Viscount Cave.) BHAGWATKOER v. DHANUKDHARI PERSHAD. 46 I. A. 259= 37 M. L. J. 513=17 A. L. J. 1036= (1919) M. W. N. 860=1 Pat. L. T. 1= 53 I. C. 347=2 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 27.

———Widow—Surrender — Reservation of the moveables—Maintenance provision.

The reservation of the moveables to which the widow is absolutely entitled under the Mithila Law does not detract from the validity of a surrender of the estate by the widow. ———Widow—Surrender—Relinquishment by—Acceleration—Consent of nearest reversioner to alienation by widow—Evidence of necessity.

There must be complete surrender of the widow's estate in order to accelerate the vesting of the estate in the nearest reversioners. The rule laid down in 30 All. 1 applies to transfers for consideration but does not extend to a transfer by way of gift. If the transfer be with the consent of the nearest reversioner, it takes effect because it affords evidence of the propriety, i.e., it justifies the transaction on the ground of legal necessity. ———Widow—Surrender—Validity of—Widow's surrender to her daughter—Right of reversioner to question surrender.

Where a Hindu widow surrenders her whole estate bona fide to her only daughter the surrender is valid and the daughter gets an absolute estate. Where a Hindu widow surrenders her whole estate in favour of her daughter, who was her next reversioner at the time in consideration of the daughter's husband undertaking to maintain her, the surrender is good. A person who is adopted by the widow after surrendering her estate is not entitled to question the surrender. 47 I. A. 233; 44 B. 255, Ref. Per Macleod, C. J.—The surrender by a Hindu widow of her life-estate to the next reversioner gives him a title which is not dependent on the continuance of the life-estate but results from its extinction and cannot be questioned by the subsequently adopted son. HINDU LAW—Widow—Surrender.

———Widow—Surrender—Consideration —Reservation of small benefit.

A Hindu widow made a gift of her husband's property in favour of her only daughter on condition that the widow was to be maintained till her death. Held, that there was no valid acceleration of the widow's estate by the gift as she had not disposed of her entire life-estate by the gift. For an acceleration by a Hindu widow of her life estate it is necessary that the widow must withdraw her own life-estate so that the whole can get vested at once in the grantee. Where there is any consideration for the gift by a Hindu widow of her life-estate that will prevent it taking effect as an acceleration, and turn the transaction into an alienation. (Macleod, C. J. and Heaton, J.) ADIVEPPA NAGAPPA v. TOUTAPPA. 44 Bom. 255 = 55 I. C. 369 = 22 Bom. L. R. 94.

———Widow — Surrender — Alienation and acceleration of estate—Distinction.

A widow can convey a greater interest than she has in two cases: one, by acceleration and the other by alienation for legal necessity. The two terms are contradictory of each other as no alienation can be an acceleration and vice versa. The doctrine of acceleration amounts in law, to the same thing as though the widow had died a natural death. It is essential, therefore, that the life-estate should be entirely withdrawn and not merely a fractional part of it. 19 Cal. 236 (P. C.), Ref. to. ———Widow — Surrender— Acceleration of estate —Essentials.

For a good legal acceleration it must be to the next reversioner and comprise the whole estate. It is not an alienation but obliteration of a bar caused by the withdrawal and extinction of the life-estate. Neither consent of the reversioner nor necessity need be proved. (*Scott, C. ———Widow—Surrender—Family settlement.

[Affirmed on appeal 57 I. C. 325 = 39 M. L. J. 161.]

———Widow — Surrender — Relinquishment — Alienation—Distinction between.

The estate of a Hindu widow or daughter might be determined in various ways. An alienation in favour of a third party does not have the effect of accelerating estate and entitling the next reversioner to immediate possession. (Chitty and Walmsley, JJ.) SARABJET PRATAB BAHADUR v. BAGHWAT KOERI. 30 I. C. 578 (Cal.).

———Widow—Surrender— Alienation — Distinction between.

Surrenders of life estates under Hindu Law are simply cases of accelerating succession to the next heir which means that the female life-tenant effaces herself and succession of the whole estate goes on to the next heir just as if the life-tenant had died. A surrender can only be in favour of the nearest reversioners. Transfer in favour of remote reversioners can only be regarded as alienations of the estate. Such alienations can be made only subject to certain conditions being complied with, but, even if the alienation be made without necessity, it is not absolutely void but merely voidable at the election of the heir, who may think fit to affirm it or may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity and may take action to recover it on the death of the female life tenant. 34 C. 329 : 31 C. 698 ; 14 P. cannot be challenged. (Clarke, C. J. and Reid, J.) KAROLI PAL v. JWALA DEVI. 17 I. C. 510 = 258 P. W. R. 1912.

———Widow—Surrender—Validity of—Reservation of absolute estate in a portion in lieu of maintenance.

A bona fide surrender of her husband's estate by a Hindu widow in favour of her reversioner is not invalidated by the fact that she got an absolute right in a small portion of the estate in lieu of her maintenance, where the portion so allowed is not in excess of her reasonable requirements. ———Widow—Surrender—Provision for maintenance of widow—Propriety of.

A provision for the maintenance of widow is consistent with the validity of a surrender of her husband's estate to the nearest reversioner. 42 Mad. 523; 40 Cal. 721; 42 Mad. 25; 31 M. L. J. 406, Rel. The surrender is invalid if by the provision for maintenance in fact division of the property with the reversioner is intended for securing large benefits to herself quite out of proportion to the maintenance that is legitimately awardable to her compatibly with her position and status in life. ———Widow—Surrender—Validity of—Provision for residence and maintenance.

A reasonable stipulation for the maintenance and residence of a Hindu widow does not affect the validity of a surrender by her provided it is a bona fide surrender of the entire interest of the widow in the whole estate and is not a mere device to divide the estate with the next reversioner. 42 Mad. 523 (P. ———Widow—Surrender—Consideration for—Omission of a small portion of the estate.

A surrender by a Hindu widow to her reversioners of practically the whole of her husband's estate is valid, though the actual consideration paid is small and very much below the value of the estate and though a part of the consideration is an agreement to reconvey the property to third parties. 31 Mad. 446; 24 M. L. J. 533, Foll. The fact that a small and inappreciable portion of the estate is not included in the deed of surrender will not invalidate it. ———Widow—Surrender—Validity—Surrender by widow and daughter in favour of next reversioner—Provision for maintenance.

———Widow—Surrender—Essentials.

Surrender must be of whole life-estate though gift of portion of the estate to a daughter would not invalidate the surrender. Surrender to a daughter's son with consent of daughters is valid. Widow—Widow's estate.

———Widow—Widow's estate—Nature of—Alienation of life-interest—Attachment of—Residue.

The position of a widow under the Hindu Law is this: The full estate of her husband is vested in her and yet owing to restrictions she can convey only an interest to last during her lifetime by a conveyance not for legal necessity. The effect of an alienation by her without necessity is that there is a division of the estate into two: (1) a life-estate enjoyable by the purchaser during her lifetime, (2) a reversionary estate to be enjoyed after her lifetime, both of which estates belonged to her husband at his death. So far as her life-interest is concerned, owing to her alienation it is not available to the creditors of her husband; but the remaining reversionary estate continues in her as part of the estate which she inherited from her husband. That residue of interest is available in her hands to her husband's creditors. The widow represents her husband's estate fully and the transfer which would be made by the attachment and court-sale of the reversionary interest is not made by any contingent reversioner or of the rights of the contingent reversioner in execution of a decree against him, and is therefore not obnoxious to S 60 (m), C. P. C., or S. 6 (a) of the T.P. Act. Tyabji, J :—The widow has a life-interest in her own absolute right and is also the representative of the deceased husband's estate which is to ———Widow—Widow's estate—Nature of—Alienation—Rights of reversioners.

The estate which a Hindu widow has in property inherited by her from her husband is neither a life-estate nor an estate held in lieu of maintenance. She is the owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolution on her husband's heirs after her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions as to necessity or propriety. Her alienation in excess of her powers is not void but voidable at the election of the reversionary heirs. The reversioner may either affirm it or treat it as a nullity at his option. 34 C. 329 Ref. (Simpson and Wazir Hasan, A. J. Cs.) MIRZA SADIQ HUSAIN v. MAHOMED KARIM. 9 O. L. J. 456= 25 O. Will—Absolute Estate.

———Will—Absolute estate—Successive estates in tail male.

A series of absolute estates defeasible in succession on the happening of an uncertain event is not a succession of life-estates. It is at the most an attempt to create a state of inheritance not recognised by Hindu Law. If an attempt to create a succession of estates in tail male is made, the first donee takes absolutely and the remaining estates fail. A Hindu may create a life-estate or successive life-estates. ———Will—Absolute estate—Devise to testator's daughter—Gift to children.

A Hindu testator, devised a portion of his property to his daughter by his will as follows:— "The said Mani daughter and her husband should live in my house and maintain themselves and use and enjoy it but her Sasaria (i.e., the relations of her husband) or her creditors, etc., have got no right of any kind to take it, and if any issue is born to her, it (i. e., the issue) is the owner thereof, but if there be no issue born to her or if she were to die without leaving any issue the whole estate should be used for some religious objects." Held, that the daughter Mani took absolutely under the will. The provision that the issue of Mani should be the owner of the property was designed merely to emphasise the absolute gift already made to Mani. (Batchelor, A. C. J. and Shah, J.) CHUNILAL v. BHOGI LAL. 43 I. C. 468=19 Bom. L. R. 930.

———Will—Absolute estate—'Malik,' meaning of.

In construing a will, regard must be had to the intentions of the testator as expressed in the will itself and not to mere speculation as to his probable intentions. The word 'Malik' in a will may be by itself sufficient to give an absolute estate to a widow but then in construing the will as a whole the knowledge of the testator as to the incidence of a widow's estate, and the ordinary notions and customs of Hindus have also to be considered to find whether an absolute estate or only a widow's estate was intended to be conveyed. ———Will—Absolute estate — Grant of absolute estate to sons and grandsons.

Under a will a testator gave full Malik rights in his estate to his sons and grandsons but placed certain restrictions on their powers of alienation. Held, that he intended to grant an absolute interest to the sons and grandsons. ———Will—Absolute estate—Hindu widow—Gift to—Gift over—Intention to cut down absolute estate—Malik.

The effect of the word "Malik" is to confer on the donee a heritable and alienable estate. But the context may qualify or cut down full proprietary rights that the word prima facie imports. The expression full proprietary right implied absolute power of alienation. 24 W. R. 305; 24 Cal. 831; 30 All. 84 (P. C.), Ref. If a widow takes an absolute interest in the estate devised, a gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her, is inoperative in law. 20 C. W. N. 463, Ref. Although it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of the Hindus with respect to the devolution of the property, a court cannot override the plain language used by the testator. The duty of the court is to discover what was the intention of the testator and the court must take that discovery from the words he has used. 2 I. A. 7 Ref. Intention and expression of intention are two different things. Those who take under the will are bound by the expressed intention of the testator, though different from the real intention. ———Will—Absolute estate—Condition subsequent—Gift to woman.

A will provided: "On my said daughter attaining her majority. . . . . the executor. . . . . will give her my estate and make over the accounts. . . . . (God forbid) if my daughter should die childless then my full brother. . . . . will get the properties." The daughter survived her father, attained majority but died childless.

HINDU LAW—Will—Absolute estate.

Held, the daughter took an absolute estate liable to be defeated either by death during the testator's lifetime or during her own minority: so that the gift over, in favour of the full brother could not take effect on the daughter's death without issue after her attaining majority. (Fletcher and Newbould, JJ.) KUMUD KRISHNA MANDAL v. JOGENDRA NATH. 21 C. W. N, 854 = 41 I. C, 511 = 26 C. L. J. 250.

———Will—Absolute estate—'Malik'—Meaning of—Gift over, after absolute interest.

Where the will gives the power of absolute disposition the widow legatee takes an absolute estate though there may be cases where all the provisions of a will taken together may indicate only a life-estate with power of sale, gift, etc., Whatever the word 'malik' may mean, the words 'Nirbuyadha malik' mean absolute owner. Where an absolute estate is given the court will not cut it down by subsequent words, unless very clear; the creation of further interests after the termination of the donee's interest which is absolute does not cut down the absolute estate. ———Will— Absolute estate—Condition—Condition of residence—Validity of—Succession Act, Ss. 82 and 121.

Where a will purports to give an absolute interest with a condition that the devisee should have an interest so long as he resided in the house of the testator, the condition is valid under S. 121 of the Succession Act. 1 I. A. 387; 24 Cal. 646; 17 C. W. N. 39, Ref. Where the terms of a will of a Hindu testator clearly indicate that an absolute interest subject to a condition was intended to be granted to a grandson by a daughter it would be wrong to interpret its provisions on the assumption that a Hindu does not desire that any portion of his property should pass beyond his own family and to cut down the interest of the grandson. 2 I. ———Will—Absolute estate— Devise to widow—Gift over to daughter—Life-interest—Absolute gift—Power of appointment—Alienation by gift or sale—Administration suit.

The will of a Hindu after providing for the performance of a certain religious ceremonies contained a devise of all his moveable and immoveable properties to his wife with power to alienate by gift or sale. He also by the same will made a gift over to his daughter. "My daughter Hara Kumari shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever property will remain after your (widow's) death and she shall enjoy the same keeping up and maintaining the aforesaid sheba, etc. The said daughter shall have the same rights as you have and to whom my said daughter may willingly give away those properties shall, while possessing the same and keeping up and maintaining the Sheba, enjoy them". Held, the testator could make an absolute gift to his daughter who was his reversionary heir in absolute estate and that she took under the father's will an absolute gift.

HINDU LAW—Will—Absolute estate.

There was no power of appointment to the daughter enjoining her to nominate as heir or successor to her father's estate and the provision for keeping up the Sheba was merely a collateral charge on the property in whosoever's hands it might be and did not affect the absolute character of the gift. The widow had absolute power of alienation in derogation of the rights of the sole reversioner, her daughter, who was only entitled to the residue, and a gift by the widow was valid. The power of alienation which though perhaps analogous to what was known as power of appointment in English Law relating to such appointments. 21 Bom. 709, Ref. ———Will—Absolute estate—Gift to widow.

Where the will read as a whole gives the widow absolute rights over the properties of the testator, the widow takes the properties absolutely. Where the provision in the will is that the property should remain in the possession of the testator's widows and on their death with the daughter with power to make a gift and sale according to their wishes. Held, the testator intended to create an absolute interest in favour of the widows and the daughter and according to S. 111 of the Succession Act the gift over to the daughter could take effect only in the event of the death of the widows during the lifetime of the testator. 23 Cal 563, Foll.; 22 Bom. 409; 24 Bom. 420, Dist. Courts will not hold that the daughter takes an absolute estate unless there are clear words indicating such intention. A gift over in favour of one, after the bequest of an absolute estate in favour of another, is bad in law. (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) MAHENDRA LAL NANDY v. RAKHAL DAS BISHAI. 16 I. It is only my mother and sister that shall be entitled to the whole of the matter mentioned in the will and none else shall be entitled to them.....If there be no issue to my sister that property should go to my dayathies (agnates) after her death." Held, that the mother and sister took absolute estates under the will and that the bequest in favour of the dayathies (agnates) was contingent on the sister dying without issue. Per Spencer, J.—The contingency on the happening of which the dayathies (agnates) would get the property, namely, the death of the sister during the lifetime of the testator without issue never happened (the sister having survived the testator) and the sister took an absolute estate. Per Krishnan, J.—The presumption as regards bequests in favour of a Hindu woman being only a life-estate, is no longer applicable in this Presidency. An estate of the kind taken by inheritance by a Hindu woman can be created by a will. The creation of a mere contingent remainder, after a woman's estate and not a more vested remainder is an indication that a woman's estate as distinguished from a life-estate was created. The English rules of construction are not applicable to the case of Hindu Wills. Hindu Law measures estates by use and not by time. A Hindu died in 1875 leaving him surviving a daughter-in-law A and a daughter B of his predeceased son. He made a will whereby he left all his property to A for life but permitted her to adopt a son. The boy if adopted was to be the owner of the property. If B had a son A was prohibited from taking a boy in adoption. Held, that whatever powers of adoption A had under Hindu Law, the testator had no power to control them by his will but he could leave his property to A's adopted son as a persona designata, provided the adopted son was born in his life-time. As deft. was adopted after B had a son he could not take as persona designata under the will. On A's death there was an intestacy. Inasmuch as there was on the death of the testator no direct gift of the remainder to B but a gift contingent on the happening of an uncertain event, viz., the dying of A without having taken a boy in adoption, the contingency could not be regarded as having occurred in view of the fact that A did adopt. It was found that only a small portion of the income was left for the expenses of the idols. Held, that a charge on the estate was created for the expenses of the idols and that subject to that charge the property should go to the testator's heirs. ———Will — Construction —General principles— "Malik," meaning of.

It is always dangerous to construe the words of one will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different will, which was adopted by a court in another case. The meaning of every word in an Indian will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it is related and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning. "Malik" when used in a will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that snch full proprietary rights are not intended to be conferred.

And after doing the same my wife is to consume, enjoy or do what she likes with respect to what remains out of my property and after the death of my wife, my son is the owner of my estate, the said son may do what he likes with respect to my property." Held, that this is not a mere enunciation of the rights of maintenance and residence of the widow under the Hindu Law. Where a Hindu father bequeaths property to his son, whether the property is taken absolutely or with the incidents of ancestral property, is a question to be determined by ascertaining the intention of the testator from the words of the will. In the absence of an intention to the contrary the natural inference is that the father intended his son to take the property as ancestral property. 24 Mad. 429, Foll. Held, on the construction of the will that the father intended his sons to take the properties as members of an undivided Hindu family with rights of survivorship inter se. ———Will—Construction—Undisposed of property—Devolution.

If a will fails to make any effectual and complete disposition of the whole of the testator's real and personal estate, of course the undisposed of interest, whether legal or equitable, devolves to the person or persons on whom the law, in the absence of disposition, casts that species of property. Wherever there is a partial intestacy either on account of no person being alive to claim under the will or by reason of a bequest being void or otherwise ineffectual, there is always a resulting trust in favour of the heir-at-law. No person can prevent his property or any part of it or any interest in it from devolving upon the heirs constituted by law after his death, except by a valid disposition giving it to some other person. He can only defeat the rights of his natural heirs by making a valid device in favour of some person, but not otherwise, for he cannot make if the property of no one, the property must vest in some one and cannot remain in abeyance or suspense without an owner. On the death of any one of the widows her share was to go to the surviving lady and that if any one of the ladies did any act which would bring disgrace on the family, the others were to be entitled to deprive her of her share. Held, that the Will gave a limited estate which on the death of two of the widows would ripen into an absolute estate for the last surviving widows. ———Will—Executory devise—Widow appointed executrix—Gift over on default of adopted son—Vesting of estate—Succession Act, S. 111—Scope of.

A Hindu testator governed by the Dayabhaga Law appointed his wife sole executrix and authorised her to adopt a son. The will proceeded, "in case of the death of an adopted son, my wife shall adopt one after another five sons in succession. If my wife dies without adopting son, or if such adpoted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue, my estate after the death of my said wife shall pass to the sons of my sister Srimati Benodini Dasi who may be living at my death." The wife survived the testator, adopted a son who died without issue and then herself died without making a further adoption. Held, on a construction of the will, that the estate vested in the widow during her life, and that the gift over to the nephews took effect on the death of the widow. The devise to the nephews was not affected by S. 111 of the Succession Act, since the event on which the distribution was to take place, was distinctly mentioned in the will as the death of the widow. S. 111 of the Succession Act embodies the rules as laid down in Edwards v. Edwards, 15 Beav. 361, unaffected by later decisions, and should be applied only to cases strictly coming within its scope. A will must be so construed as most fully to effectuate the intention expressed by the words used by the testator. If the words employed are voces signatae, they must be so accepted, whatever suspiclon might exist as to whether the testator had in his mind that particular view of his own language. But in ordinary circumstances ordinary words must receive their ordinary construction and the whole will, that is the whole of the words employed by the testator, must be looked at tsgether so as to determine his whole intention. Words which have a general meaning ought not to be subjected to limitations not necessarily implied by them. It is a settled principle that in a will the term "should either of these two sons die without having had (leaving) any male issue" should not be limited to a death occurring before the death of the testator himself but must receive their full meaning. The surviving son was entitled to the estate conveyed by the will. (Lord Shaw.) CHUNNILAL PARVATI SHANKAR v. BAI SAMRATH.

Will—Gift.

——Will—Gift to a class—After born children—Rule in Leake v. Robinson—Vested interest.

A childless Hindu testator directed after the lifetime of his mother and wife, the sons of his two sisters "that is to say their sons who are now in existence as also those who may be born hereafter shall in equal shares hold the said properties in possession and enjoyment by right of inheritance." The testator died the next day, and on a question arising as to the construction of the will. Held, (1) that the bequest was confined to such of the sister's children as were alive at the death of the testator and (2) that the children were not intended to take by right of inheritance, but by testamentary gift of shares which vested at the testator's death, though possession and enjoyment were postponed. When children are mentioned in a will that means, prima facie, if no intervening interest be given, that which is considered to be the testamentary meaning in the case of a gift to individuals, viz., those who may be living at the death of the testator. If the gift be not immediate, it may be that he intends to include all those children who may be living at the time of distribution and the court judges of the intention in this respect from the whole scope of the will. The rule is not altered by the addition of words of futurity as if the gift be "to children born and to be born or to children begotten and to be begotten." 5 App. Cases 123, Ref. The rule in Leake v. Robinson is not applicable in the construction of Hindu wills. Where there is a gift to a class, some of whom are or may be incapacitated from taking because not

The testator died in 1875 leaving two daughters one of whom had sons. In 1904 when both the daughters were alive, in a suit by one of the daughters for the construction of the will, the Privy Council held that each daughter was entitled to a moiety of the estate for life with benefit of survivorship and to a moiety absolutely. Subsequently one of the daughters died leaving several sons whereupon the other daughter claimed the whole by survivorship for her life. Held, then the intention of the testator was that the sons of a daughter should take her share on her death and that the former decision of the Privy Council, which was given on the then existing state of affairs did not decide against the rights of the daughter's sons in reference to a subsequent event. The only safe rule of construing a will is to try to find out the meaning of the testator taking the whole of the document together and give effect to the meaning. A Hindu testator bequeathed a property to the plaintiff his daughter-in-law and provided that her husband "should receive one half of the income accruing from the property during his life-time"; that after his death, the gift of the income accruing from immoveable property shall devolve upon his male issue if any and that after plff.'s death the property shall devolve upon male issue if any of the plff. and her husband. Held, that the testator intended that his estate should vest in his daughter-in-law for her life-time and that his son (plff.'s husband) and, after his death, his male issue should receive a moiety of the income accruing therefrom. During the life-time of the plff. her son had no right whatsoever in the estate and was not consequently entitled to dispose of either temporarily or permanently. Having regard to the terms of Section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, Ss. 101 and 102 of the Succession Act which are applicable to Hindus must be read as if they contained a proviso that the disposition must be of such a character as could have been made before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, but this provision can be availed of only if the person who invokes its aid is not precluded by any law to which he is subject from availing himself of it. The expression "at a time which is subsequent to such date" in S. 2 (2) of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act, 1914, does not refer to any fixed period, and if the final vesting is to take place after passing of the Act, the Act would validate such disposition. In 1889 a Hindu made a will disposing of his ancestral property in respect of which he was the sole surviving co-parcener and authorising his widow to adopt. In 1890 the testator made another will containing dispositions of the property inconsistent with the will, but containing no express revocation of the earlier will or of the authority to adopt thereby given. The later will of 1890 was found to be invalid, the testator not having the power to dispose of the properties owing to his having ceased to be the sole co-parcener. Held, that the second invalid will did not revoke the power to adopt contained in the first will. A person on his death, left a widow but no children and no near relatives except such as were relations of his wife. The appellants, who successfully opposed the registration of the will of the deceased, brought a suit against the widow and Respondent—sister's son of the widow—in whose favour the will was made, for a declaration that they had the position of the nearest agnates of the deceased and that the so-called will was not executed in fact and was, if executed, executed by the testator while in an unsound state of mind. The appellants failed to prove their agnacy; but they alleged that the deceased had an intention to make a will, but a will in favour of charity. The lower courts first approached the question of genuineness of the will. Held: (1) The natural order was first to take up the question whether the persons who were attacking the will had any title to raise the question. (2) Upon the admission of the appellants, whose right to prevail was only upon intestacy, that the deceased had an intention to make a will, raised a presumption of the genuineness of the will. (3) The conduct of the widow in admitting the genuineness of the will but trying to resile from the admission, when the second respondent, who took the properties under the will, would not go along with her, also proved its genuineness. There can be no question that in a case to which the rule in the Tagore Case applies, a gift which cannot be made directly cannot be made indirectly by means of a power conferred by the testator on his executor. 24 I. A. 93 followed. The rule in the Tagore case is a general rule to which there may be exceptions. Property cannot be made inheritable otherwise than as the law allows, but there may be exceptional cases in which Hindu Law sanctions a departure from the rule that the donee must be in existence. The Hindu Law allows the founder of a religious trust or institution to lay down a general rule of succession to the managership and a power given by the founder to his widow to appoint a successor to the shebaitship cannot be said to be improperly or invalidly exercised if the widow appoints a person who was not in existence at the date of the death of the testator, as shebait. A Hindu testator who died in 1912 left a will containing the following provision in favour of his descendants:—"The building valued at Rs. 2,000 shall be taken by my third daughter and the rental income derived therefrom shall be enjoyed by her. She has no power to make sale, gift, mortgage, etc. After her issue shall use and enjoy it from son to grandson with power of gift, mortgage and sale." The testator's daughter had a son born in September 1918 but he died the next day after his birth and the daughter herself died a few days later. She left her surviving her husband and two sisters. On a question arising as to the rights of the parties under the will held that the daughter took only a life-estate in the property bequeathed and that she did not acquire an absolute interest by reason of her son having predeceased her. The Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act operates retrospectively and therefore applied to the case and the property became vested in the son as soon as he was born, Consequently the succession was to be traced to the son, though he was not born at the period of distribution. 31 M. At the date of his death he had living one grandson and no other grandson was born during the lives of his widow and daughters. Held, that although the grandson was not mentioned in the will there was a valid bequest in his favour of a life-estate with a valid remainder in favour of the brother and nephew. ———S. 2—Its scope and its effect on property as regards forfeiture.

This Act applies even to widows among whom there is a caste custom permitting remarriage. This Act operates as a forfeiture not only of property inherited from her former husband but that of all existing rights at the time of remarriage, without impairing her right to future interests of inheritance as of succession to her son by first marriage after his death. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) KASHI RAO v. UKARDA. 31 I. C. 290=11 N. L. R. 116.

The remarriage of a Hindu widow extinguishes her estate in the property of her deceased husband and the presumptive interest of the reversioner vests under S. 2. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) NATHU v. NAI BAHU. 29 I. C. 612=11 N. L. R. 86.

———S. 2—Act does not apply to remarriage by custom.

The Act merely enables widows of those castes to remarry, who by their custom are prevented from doing so and declares the consequences entailed thereon it does not alter any customs relating to remarriage or its legal incidents. S. 2 of the Act does not apply to a case where a Hindu widow remarries according to a custom and such custom allows her to retain the property inherited from her first husband. (*Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. HINDU WIDOWS' REMARRIAGE ACT (XV of 1856), S. 5.

A Hindu widow who becomes a Mahomedan and remarries loses her right to her husband's property. S. 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act includes all persons who being Hindus become widows and any such widow, if she remarries, loses the estate which she inherited from her deceased husband. Apart from the Act, under the Hindu Law a widow's right to succession is based on the ground that she is half of the body of her deceased husband and that she is capable of conferring spiritual benefits on him. When she remarries she ceases to be half of the body of her late husband or to be able to confer spiritual benefits on him and she becomes the wife and half of the body of her new husband. The reason therefore for her keeping the estate of her deceased husband disappears. 11 A. 330; 31 A. 161; 32 A. 489 Diss. 1 M. 226: 41 M. 1078; 21 C. W. N. 906; 22 C. 589; 14 C. W. N. 346; 8 C. L. ———S. 2.—Out-caste widow — Remarriage — Alienation—Effect of.

An out-caste Hindu widow does not cease to be a Hindu and if she remarries the provisions of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act would apply. An alienation by her of her first husband's property after her remarriage would be invalid. (Coutts and Adami, JJ.) MUSSAMMAT SOMARIA v. BULARYA. 54 I. C. 820.

The widow by her remarriage forfeits all her interest in the estate though she may belong to a caste which by custom allowed the remarriage of a widow. She will forfeit her right to maintenance out of the deceased husband's property. (Sanderson, C. J. and N. R. Chatterjee, J.) MAHOMED UMAR v. MT. MAN KUAR. 40 I. C. 783=21 C. W. N. 906.

The object of the Act is to remove all legal obstacles to Hindu Widow Remarriages. S. 5 of the Act never intended to lay down any proposition regarding the inheritance by a Hindu widow. A remarried Hindu widow is not entitled to inherit as a gotraja sapinda to the relations of her first husband. (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) PRANJIVAN HARGOVAN v. BAI BHIKHI. 45 Bom. 1247=63 I. ———S. 216—Will—Executor—Power to carry on business—No direction in will—Discretion of court—Debts incurred in carrying on business—Indemnity.

A died leaving a will dated the 11th December, 1904, whereby he appointed his wife B and another person executors and gave B power to adopt a son to him, and made the adopted son proprietor of his estate. His estate consisted inter alia of banking businesses at C and D. The banking businesses were the ancestral business and the backbone of the firm, although they were to a great extent hazardous and the credit of the estate rested entirely on the businesses which were carried on by borrowing money and were without capital. On the 24th May, 1905, after discharging a caveat, a probate was issued to the executors. When the caveat was entered on the 5th April, 1905, administrators pendente lite were appointed. The plaintiff was adopted on the 26th April, 1906. The executors after the issue to them of probate, without obtaining the leave or directions of the court continued the testator's businesses though no power was given to them by the will, down to the 19th April, 1912, when they stopped payment at C and D. The claimant during the period the executors were carrying on the business, lent money on hatchittas to the business, the account being a running one and all the sums now claimed by the claimants were in respect of liabilities incurred by the executors during their conduct of the business: Held, that when probate was granted to the executors, the whole of the testator's estate including the businesses vested in them and that they held it from that time not as managers but as executors and subject to their rights and liabilities as such. Under S. 216 of the Hindu Wills Act, their duties were to collect with reasonable diligence the property of the testator and the debts due to him. Their right was not to carry on the business for an indefinite period but only for the purpose of realisation as one of the assets of the estate. The executors were personally liable for the debts and had no general rights of indemnity out of the estate. Re Evans 34 Ch. D. 597; Strickland v. Symens 26 Ch. D. 245, Ref. If the assets had accrued to the business and through it to the estate during the trading, the executors would have been entitled to the indemnity from the estate for what it had cost them to obtain such assets if they were not indebted to the estate, and the creditors could stand in their shoes to the extent of the executor's rights. Mere delay in filing accounts does not destroy any right of indemnity that may exist; for such right to exist, the executors must show that they are not indebted to the estate. ———Failure to keep terms—Owner if can recover full amount from hirer and guarantor—Vendee from hirer, title.

In a contract of hiring and letting of a machine, the plff. is entitled to recover from the hirer and the guarantor jointly and severally the full amount which the hirer had agreed to pay for the monthly hire of the machine. A purchaser from the hirer while he is still so, does not acquire a good title to the machine against the owner. (Rattigan, C. J.) SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY OF LAHORE v. NAIZ ALI. 144 P. W. Property in goods purchased under the hire purchase system does not pass to the vendee on the execution of the document. S. 78, para. 3 of the Contract Act does not apply to such a case. Where an article purchased under the hire purchase system was before the completion of payments and contrary to agreement pledged and the creditor attaches and sells the article and the property is purchased by a third person, the latter cannot claim the benefit of S. 178 of the Contract Act. ———Costs—Practice as to.

The rule in divorce cases is that even though a wife's defence fails or her counter-charges break down or she has been proved guilty of adultery, the husband has to pay her costs. The policy of the matrimonial law in England and among Christians in India, has always demanded that the husband shall always be responsible for his wife's costs. Indeed the usual practice in every husband's petition is to require him to deposit a sum for the wife's costs before the petition is allowed to proceed. (Walsh and Stuart, JJ.) DWYR v. H. M. C. ———S. 31 (3) as amended by Act V of 1916—Effect of amendment—Re-assessment after composition—Legality of "As regards any tax not already due thereunder," meaning of.

Under Act V of 1916, a re-assessment of income may be made. The effect of the addition of S. 21 sub-section (3) is that a subsisting agreement for composition is put an end to on that date and any future agreement is put an end to when any further change in the rate of tax is made. The agreement still subsists as to sums which have become payable but have not been actually paid at the date of the change of rate. ———S. 39—Assessment—Civil Court has no jurisdiction.

In assessing income-tax, the Collector has to determine, what is the income and what is the outgoing which ought to be legitimately deducted. A mistake by the Collector in his decision cannot be rectified by a Civil Court in a suit brought before it for the purpose. A company carried on a factory at Raichur in the territory of the Nizam of Hyderabad. At that factory material was pressed. Against persons who brought the material to the factory a charge was made, and the charge was received wholly in Hyderabad. The company's head office was in Bellary. There were Directors there and they controlled the business carried on at Raichur by directing its policy, fixing the rates to be charged for the work done there, examining its accounts and issuing dividend warrants in respect of the profits earned. The only other thing done in British India was the receipt of some money for the purpose of the office expenditure at Bellary, and possibly, the receipt of some money which was, occasionally used for the payment of dividend warrant at Bellary, though by the terms of the dividend warrants, they were payable only at the office of the treasury at Raichur. Held, that the Company could not be assessed to income-tax under the Income Tax Act VII of 1918 on the whole of its profits for the year. The prosecution of an assessee under S. 39 (d) of the Act for failure to produce his account books in obedience to a notice is not barred by reason of a prior order for penal assessment against him or even though the Collector had treated the non-production of account books by the assessee as evidence of the falsity of his return. The proviso to S. 24 is intended to bar a prosecution under S. 40 of the Act not one under S. 39. The only ground on which the Collector can direct a penal assessment under S. 24 of the Act is that the assessee has made a false return. INCOME-TAX ACT (VII of 1918), S. 51.

No statute, Imperial or Indian, is to be found giving expressly, or by implication, a right of appeal either with or without the leave of the High Court to His Majesty in Council from a decision or order made, or judgment given under S. 51 of the Indian Income-Tax Act of 1918. Neither can any such statute be found giving a general right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the Orders or judgments of any class of courts as the 3rd Section of the English Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, gives a general right of appeal to the House of Lords from the judgments or orders of the courts therein mentioned. Clause 39 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay considered. The words 'original jurisdiction" are only used in contra-distinction to the words 'made on appeal" mentioned earlier in the clause. A decision under S. 51 of the Income Tax Act to be appealable must be either a final judgment or final decree or a final order. A final judgment as understood in English litigation is nothing more than that there should be a proper litis contestatio and a final adjudication between the parties to it on the merits. The fact that the functionary who states a special case for the opinion of the court is or is not bound to act upon it does not necessarily determine whether the order and decision of the court is or is not merely advisory. In order to determine whether an order made by a court on a case stated is final or merely advisory, it is necessary to examine closely the language of the enactment, whether statute rule or order, giving the power to state a case. When a case is stated for the "opinion" of the court, that word would serve prima facie to indicate that the order made by the court was only advisory. Where the case is referred for the "decision",or "determination" of a question, there is a prima facie difficulty in holding that the order embodying this determination or decision is advisory but the use of these words or one of them is not decisive. A decision, judgment or order made by the High Court under S. 51 of the Income-Tax Act is merely advisory and not in the proper and legal sense of the term final and the appeal is incompetent. ———S. 51 — Chief Revenue Authority can be compelled to state a case.

If an assessee applies for a case, the Revenue authority must state it, unless he can say that it is frivolous or unnecessary. He is not to wait for the court to order him to do it; it will be a misfeasance and a breach of the statutory duty if he does not do it. The word, "may" in the section does not mean "shall." Neither are the words "it shall be lawful" those of compulsion. Only the capacity or power is given to the authority. But when a capacity or power is given to public authority there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it. Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, 5 A. C. 214, 222, Foll. Always supposing that there is a serious point of law to be considered, there does lie a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the court; and if he does not appreciate that there is such a serious point, it is in the power of the court to control him and to order him to state a case. If there is a point of law it ought to be decided in a regular manner and upon proper materials. Ordering a case to be stated does not depend upon the question whether the Chief Revenue Authority had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that a reference was unnecessary. The question whether capital placed in a particular investment was capital employed in the business or not was not a pure question of fact, upon which the decision of the Income Tax Commissioners would be conclusive but was a question of law or of mixed law and fact, the decision of the Revenue Authority upon which would be open to review. An important question of law upon the construction of the statute is involved. This may be most tersely expressed by asking the question what are interest bearing securities which form part of the assets of the business and are therefore to be treated as part of the capital and one guide in arriving at this conclusion may well be the difference of language between the later Indian and the earlier English Act. ———S. 2—Registered firm—Assessment—Mode of —Registration in the year.

Where the partners had lost their right to be dealt with as a "registered firm" for the financial year 1922-1923, for the simple reason that they had failed even to provide themselves with an instrument of partnership within the extended period allowed them for the presentation of their return of income, they could not be dealt with as such retrospectively the next year. The obvious intention of the rules, as shown by the wording of the prescribed form of certificate, is that such applications for registration should ordinarily be presented in the month of April, the first month of the financial year. Where the period for making a return of income has been extended, there can be no objection to a certificate being issued bearing the correct date of some other month. It will take effect from the date specified therein. When the assessment comes to be made, the officer charged with that duty will have to determine simply whether the firm with whose return or with whose accounts he is dealing, is or is not a "registered firm" within the meaning of the definition. Where the objectors had been plainly told that they would be dealt with for the year 1922-1923 as an "unregistered firm" their attempt to escape from this position by going to the Income-Tax Officer at the beginning of January, 1923 is wholly futile. (Banerji and Piggott, JJ.) LALLA MAL HARDEO DAS COTTON SPINNING MILLS, In the matter of.

The objectors were being assessed to income-tax for the financial year 1922, 1923 on the basis of the profits disclosed by their accounts for the calendar year 1921. In those accounts a total sum of Rs. 42,882 was shown as interest paid on account of money advanced during the year by the partners in the firm for the purpose of carrying on business. The objectors claimed that this interest should be treated as an allowance admissible under S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-Tax Act, and should therefore be deducted from the net profits of the year before these are assessed to Income-Tax. Held that such interest represented merely an assignment of a part of the net profits for the year in favour of partners who were regarded as persons having a right to such assignment by reason of special advances of capital made by them in the course of the year. The question whether there has been an advance of capital by particular partners, or bona fide borrowing of money by the firm in which the lender happens to be a partner must be treated as one of fact in each case. (Banerji and Piggott, JJ.) LALLA MAL HARDEO DAS COTTON SPINNING MILLS, In the matter of.

Subsequently the plaintiff sold the lands to the 2nd defendant, the arrangement being that the 2nd defendant should pay the consideration money for the sale to the first defendant and thus discharge the mortgage. The plaintiff also executed a mortgage on the house to the 2nd defendant for the purpose of securing the addtional amount required to discharge the mortgage due to the first defendant. The 2nd defendant failed to discharge the mortgage with the result that the first defendant obtained a decree on the mortgage and brought the properties to sale. At this stage the 2nd defendant paid a portion of the mortgage decree and by an arrangement with the mortgagee got the lands alone released. The house was brought to sale and was purchased by the 2nd defendant himself in the name of another person who ejected the plaintiff therefrom. The plaintiff entered into a contract in December 1922 for the purchase by him from the defendant of certain Java sugar to arrive by a named ship due about the end of the year at about Rs. 20 to cwt. "ex-godown." Duty was payable on sugar at 25 per cent. On the 'tariff value" which was fixed annually at the average of the market prices ruling during the previous 12 months ending with September, the practice being to bring the new tariff valuation into operation from the beginning of January. When the goods in the case arrived the tariff valuation was reduced and the amount of duty payable was consequently less. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the excess, where he had paid the full contract amount in order to get the goods, held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The purchaser is entitled under the circumstances to deduct from the cost price so much as will be equivalent to the decrease of duty consequent on the reduction of tariff value under Section. 10 of the Tariff Act (VIII of 1894) as amended by Act. IV of 1916. The word 'duty' in Section. 10 refers to the amount payable and arrived at by taking into account the tariff value and the rate of duty. The excess payment made by the plaintiff as a condition of his getting the goods is a payment made under duress and not a voluntary payment and can therefore be regained. (*Schwabe, C. ———Effect of adjudication on decree-holder's rights—Execution proceedings— Want of sufficient proof—Procedure.

An adjudication of a judgment-debtor as an insolvent divests the rights of the decree-holder and remits him to the position of an ordinary creditor. In the court of first instance no plea as to insolvency of the judgment-debtor was made by the heirs of the judgment-debtor who applied to the High Court where some made both the High Court and in the petition for leave to appeal to Privy Council. No notice was given to the Insolvency Court or to the receiver. It was not known whether the adjudication was annulled. The Privy Council made a declaration while dismissing the appeal that if the insolvency had not been annulled or otherwise terminated on or before the date of order of the court of first instance, the order would owing to the absence of the receiver or other representative of the Insolvency Court, be inoperative except in so far as it decided against any asserted interest of the sons and heirs of insolvent, who were parties to the proceedings. INSURANCE.

——Damage— Increase during possession of Insurer—Liability of Insurance Company.

A provision in a policy of Fire insurance in virtue of which the Company takes and holds possession of premises damaged by fire is for the purpose of enabling it to minimise the damage. It does so in its own interest in order to minimise its loss and not because it is under a duty to the assured. Its powers are of the nature of a privelege to do that which is most for its benefit under the circumstances so as to reduce the loss. When the Company has thus taken possession and done what in its own opinion was wisest to minimise the damage it cannot say that the actual damage shown at the date of giving up possession to the owner is not the consequence of the fire, Damage ——Under-writer — Duty of Policy-holder—Right of.

Where the money is in the hands of a third person, the assured must be paid the total loss. The under-writers must pay the total loss and they will then take all such steps to get all proceeds from the hands of third parties, as the assured himself could have taken, In case of total loss the policy-holder has only to give intimation of the loss at the earliest possible opportunity to the insurer and then he can claim money payable under the policy. When an insurance policy is entered into according to the local custom prevailing in the sea port town of Cutch Mandvi and the cargo insured is totally lost on a foreign coast, a claim on the policy can be established without producing a 'Mahajans Majur." The custom requiring the production of a Mahajans Majur as a condition precedent to making a claim under a policy is vague, indefinite and unreasonable and cannot therefore be binding. ——Condition in policy that if claim is not brought within a certain time policy would be forfeited is valid.

A clause in a policy of insurance that if on a claim being rejected, a suit is not filed within 3 months, the benefit under the policy would be lost does not offend against Ss. 28 and 23 of the Contract Act and hence is perfectly valid. ——Contract—Good faith—Disclosure of material fact necessary.

As insurance contracts are based on utmost good faith there is a duty to disclose to the insurer all facts known to the assured and likely to influence him in fixing premium. Where the assured had information at the time of application for insurance that his stock of jute may be set fire to, by an incendiary but did not inform the insurers the reason of the insurance, this non-disclosure discharges the liability of the insurers. There is no obligation to disclose facts known to the insurer or which he might know on slight enquiry. (Chaudhuri, J.) IMPERIAL PRESSING COMPANY v. BRITISH CROWN ASSURANCE CORPORATION, LD.

INSURANCE.

———Damage—Reduction of—Insurer paying full indemnities—Right to benefit accruing subsequently to the assured—Suit, form of.

The general principle is that anything by which the loss sustained by the assured is reduced or diminished, reduces the amount, which the insurer is to pay. If the insurer has paid the full amount and anything which diminishes the loss afterwards comes to the hands of the person to whom he has paid it, the insurer is in equity entitled to be recouped by having that amount paid to him. So a suit to enforce such benefit ought to be in name of assured. (Jenkins, C. J. and Woodroffe, J.) BRITISH FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RY. ———Naming of beneficiary in the policy—Effect of.

(Shadi Lal, C. J. and Martineau, J.) MATIN v. MAHOMED MATIN. 1922 Lah. 145.

———Lapse of policy—Suit for refund of premia paid, if lies.

Where under the rules of an Insurance Co., a policy lapses on default of payment of premia, it is not open to a defaulting policy-holder to recover the premia actually paid. But if such a rule is made after the policy-holder's assurance was effected and completed, the rule will not affect that insurance, and the policy-holder might recover the premia paid by him. ———Contract—Condition precedent—Non-fulfilment—Liability—Contractual limitations—Extension of.

Where the conditions printed on the back of a policy of fire insurance, are conditions precedent to the attaching of any liability of the company, and are lawful, a claim under the policy without fulfilling those conditions must fail. The contractual limitation in an insurance policy will not be extended on the ground that the assured was in prison and unable to perform the conditions. Fire.

———Arbitration clause—Condition precedent to suit—Rejection of claim by Insurance company—Right to sue.

A policy of fire-insurance provided that if a claim was made under the policy and rejected by the insurance company and a suit was not commenced within three months after such rejection all benefit under the policy would be forfeited.

INSURANCE—Life.

There was also a clause to the effect that if any difference arose as to the amount of any loss or damage such difference should independently of all other questions be referred to arbitration and that it should be a condition precedent to any right of action upon the policy. Plaintiffs sued for damages from the insurance company in respect of the destruction of their goods by fire, The trial court found that the deft company had rejected the claim and that the suit was therefore competent. The court also stayed the suit and referred the parties to arbitration. Held that the rejection of the claim by the company gave the plaintiffs a right of action within three months after the date of rejection. The plaintiffs had a right to sue to have the question of the propriety of the rejection decided and it was only in the event of that question being decided in favour of the plaintiffs that the amount of loss or damage should be ascertained. The suit should therefore be heard in the ordinary course. (Macleod, C. J. and Crump, J.) THE EAGLE STAR AND BRITISH DOMINIONS INSURANCE CO. v. DINANATH.
47 Bom 503=25 Bom. L. R. 164=1923 Bom. 249.

———Insurance—Mortgage of insured property—Liability of insurer to mortgagee—Notice.

Where the owner of a mill insures it against fire, and subsequently mortgages it to a third person and the mill and the premises are destroyed by fire, the insurance company is not liable to indemnify the mortgagees against the loss. The contract is one to indemnify the insured and not any other person between whom and the company there was no privity of contract. To entitle the mortgagees to any claim on the policy there must be a covenant not only to insure but to insure for the benefit of the mortgagees or to apply the policy money in reinstatement or otherwise for the benefit of the mortgage or an assignment of the policy taken. In the absence of any such covenant or assignment of the policy the mortgagee cannot claim anything against the insurer. The right of the mortgagee was to bring the mortgaged property to sale or in the event of its alienation by the mortgagor to follow it into the hands of a purchaser. If the insurance company sold the remnants of the machinery, etc. after the fire under the terms of the policy, then, the contract of insurance being one of indemnity, any salvage belonging to the insurers is presumed under such circumstances, to have been abandoned any anything that remains of the property belonging to the insurers to reimburse themselves so far as they can by selling the salvage for what it will fetch. ———Covering note.

A covering note by an Insurance agent is a mere contract to issue policy on receipt of premium before the vessel leaves the harbour. If goods are lost the owner should at once pay the premium and demand the policy. There is no local trading custom in Karachi that after loss of goods on the return journey the shipper can, by paying a special premium, demand a policy covering such journey. (*Crouch, A. J. The rate of interest on a stale claim for arrears of rent is only 6 per cent. When there is no period fixed for payment nor a demand for the payment of interest nor any definite or specific contract to the effect that interest should be paid on arrears of rent it is not rightful to claim the same. 26 A. 299; 20 M. 481; 26 C. 955, Foll. ———Basis of claim—Unpaid purchase-money—Purchaser taking possession of property sold—Purchaser bound to pay interest on unpaid purchase-money from the date he takes possession.

It is a principle of equity, quite independent of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, that where one party to a contract of sale enters into possession of the property before the whole price has been paid, he is ordinarily liable to pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money from the date when he enters into possession. ———Cessation of — Money borrowed left in deposit with lender—Effect— Interest if payable.

If a person takes a loan on interest and leaves the amount borrowed with the lender as a deposit without interest, to be drawn on as he may require, the interest payable on the agreement of loan does not cease to run. The mere fact that a borrower does not require the money and, therefore, does not demand it for a long time and that the lender is himself able to use it during that time can make no difference on the lender's right to charge interest on the loan. Compound Interest.

———Compound interest — Contract to pay—Inference from accounts.

If the liability under the general undertaking to pay interest is further extended by what may be styled an appurtenant undertaking to pay interest upon arrears of interest and the further undertaking is found in the same document following the provisions for payment of interest, it might be assumed that the parties intended that both the principal and the appurtenant undertaking should apply to the question of liability for post diem interest. 19 A. 39; 20 All. 171; 23 M. 453; 11 M. In the mortgage sued no mention was made about the payment of interest year by year but after the clause relating to the payment of principal and interest after due date there was no stipulation that interest should be payable at the contract rate. The penalty of not paying at the end of two years was stated to be the right of the mortgagee to recover principal and interest when he liked. There was no stipulation that if the money was not paid on the due date interest at the contract rate would continue to run. Held, that the contract was so onerous that the deed should be read as far as possible to favour the mortgagor, that there was no reason shown, such as insufficiency of security, why such an exorbitant rate of interest should be agreed upon and that the court should fix a reasonable rate as payable after the due date. Alteration of law.

———Alteration of law—Duty of court.

A court cannot alter the law or read into a statute, words which it thinks, should have been there. (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.) DAMODAR DAS v. JHAOO SINGH. 39 I.C. 87=15 A.L.J. 319.

———Alteration of law — New Act — Express alteration—Interpretation of old Act.

When a new Act superseding an old one, contains an express alteration in respect of certain points in the old Act, the former cannot be of any help in interpreting such points in the latter. (Hallifax, J.) SAKHUBAI v. HARI. 67 I. C. 229.

———Alteration of law—Vested rights—Effect on.

There is a presumption, that vested rights are not taken away by fresh legislation and when the terms of a statute are ambiguous, it ought not to be construed as taking away any vested right, if it is open to any other construction. There is no such presumption where the language is clear and free from ambiguity. (Lindsay, J. C.) MUNICIPAL BOARD, FYZABAD v. VIDYA DHARI.
63 I. C. 334=22 Cr. L. J. 638=24 O. C. 157.

———Alteration in law—Presumption.

It must be presumed that the legislature does not intend to make any alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares or by necessary implication. It is improbable that the Legislature would overthrow fundamental principles or depart from the general system of law. (Crouch and Hayward, A. J. Cs.) SOBARAJ DWARKADAS v. EMPEROR. 45 I. C. 399=19 Cr. L. J. 691=11 S. L. R. 128.

Ambiguity.

———Ambiguity—Language obscure—Inference.

Where the language is obscure, the Judge may infer that no change in the existing law is intended unless contrary inference is necessary to be drawn owing to expediency or convenience. (Heaton, J.) HARGOVIND v. BAI HIRBAI.
22 Bom. L. R. 619=58 I. C. 205=44 B. 986.

If the words of an Act are plain but anomalous, no other construction can be put upon the words by courts. (Chatterjee and Richardson, JJ.) KASIM ALI v. CHAIRMAN OF MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS, CHITTAGONG.
21 C. W. N. 601=35 I. C. 782=25 C. L. J. 639.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Application by Courts.

———Ambiguity.

Where an enactment is capable of two interpretations, that construction should be adopted which avoids consequences presumably not intended by the legislature. (Miller, C. J. Mullick and Ali Imam, JJ.) SHEO NANDAN PRASAD v. EMPEROR.
3 P. L. J. 581=46 I. C. 977=5 P. L. W. 324=19 Cr. L. J. 833=(1919) Pat. 1 (F. B.).

———Ambiguity — Construction in favour of subject.

Where the meaning of the statute is not clear, the Act must be construed in favour of the subject. (Hartnoll and Ormond JJ.) CHIN AH. YAING, In re. 7 Bur. L. T. 275=24 I. C. 823=7 L. B. R. 359.

Amending Acts.

———Amending Acts — Vested right — Not affected.

If the application of the provisions of an Amending Act makes it impossible to exercise a vested right of suit, the Act should be construed as not applicable to such cases. 41 C. 1125; 17 C. L. J. 316, Rel. (Mookerjee and Chotzner, JJ.) AJIT SINGH v. BHAGABATI CHARAN MUKERJEE.
36 C. L. J. 263=1923 Cal. 491.

———Amending Acts—Court Fees Act.

The true mode of interpreting a statute like the Court Fees Act repeatedly amended is to take the sections as a whole and then to give effect to the legislative intent on a particular matter. (Mookerjee, J.) HARRIETT TEVIOT KERR In the Goods of.
18 C. L. J. 308=21 I. C. 502=18 C. W. N. 121.

Analogy.

———Analogy—Decisions under other Acts, value of.

Where a question arises under a particular Act the decisions, in such case must depend upon the provisions of the particular Act and not upon the construction of other Acts. (Macleod, C. J. and Fawcett, J.) KANDARAO VITHOBA KORE v. THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY.
63 I. C. 581=23 Bom. L. R. 361.

When there is a specific provision in one of the Acts, it would not be in consonance with the ordinary rules of interpretation of statutes to regard a specific provision in one of the Articles of an Act as containing a general view of law applicable to claims under other Articles but the proper view is to limit the restrictive period to the particular claim provided for and to construe the language of the other articles in their actual sense. The court cannot cut down the clear words of a statute to avoid hardship to one party. The court would proceed to consolidate suits, if at all, only where the consolidation is asked for before the trial of the suit begins and the evidence to be given is common to both. ——Hardship—If limits plain meaning section.

Where a plain interpretation of a statute is possible without its being unjust, inconsistent or unreasonable, that should not be departed from, simply because it may cause hardship in some particular case. The language of a codifying enactment must receive its natural meaning without any assumption as to its having probably been the intention to leave unaltered the law as it existed before. 23 C. 563, Foll. (Fawcett, A. J. C.) MANSOOR v. MINO SAHEBDIN. 13 I. C. 234 = 5 S. L. R. 125.

——Hardship—Consideration of.

Where the meaning of words used in a statute is clear and unambiguous, it is not open to the court to speculate as to the intention and decline to give effect to the strict sense because of some apparent or supposed hardship. ——Harmonious construction—All provisions to be taken into account—Inconvenience—Absurdity.

A construction which leads to absurdity or inconvenience should be avoided, unless express words of a statute compel the court to hold otherwise. The proper course in the construction of a statute is to examine the language and find its natural meaning uninfluenced by considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood and assuming that it was probably intended to have it unaltered, to see if the words will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. ———Intention of legislature—Meaning of words used—Plain construction.

A court is not at liberty to speculate on the intention of the Legislature, and to construe them according to its own notions of what ought to have been enacted. Nothing could be more dangerous than to make such considerations the ground for construing an enactment that is unambiguous in itself. To depart from the meaning on account of such view is, in truth, not to construe the Act, but to alter it. But the businesses of the interpreter is not to improve the statute, it is to expound it. The interpretation of law must be according to what the words ———Intention of legislature—Language plain.

If the language of a statute is clear and unambiguous the court must give effect to it and has no right to extend its operation in order to carry out the real or supposed intention of the legislature. It matters not in such a case, what the consequences may be. Where by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning anything is enacted by a legislature it must be enforced even though it must be absurd or mischievous. (*Shadi Lal, C. Language.

———Language—Plain meaning.

Per Crump, J.—Courts are bound to construe a section of an Act according to the plain meaning of the language unless either in the section itself, or in any part of the Act anything is found to modify, qualify or alter the statutory language even if absurdity or anomaly be the result of such interpretation. The proper course in interpreting an Act intended to codify a particular branch of the law is first to examine its language for its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and to start with enquiring how the law previously stood and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. (Macleod, C. J. and Crump, J.) ALFRED WILKINSON v. WILKINSON. 47 Bom. 843=25 Bom. L. R. 945=1923 Bom. 321.

———Language—Same words to be construed in same sense.

Where in a statute the same word is used in different sections it ought to be interpreted in the same sense throughout unless the context in any particular section plainly requires that it should be understood in a different sense. (Chandavarkar and Heaton, JJ.) BABA YESHVANT DESAI, In re. 35 Bom. 401=13 Bom. L. R. 505=11 I. C. 614=12 Cr. L. J. 430.

———Language—How to be construed.

Words of an Act should be construed so as to further and not to restrict the purpose of the Act. (Teunon and Newbould, JJ.) MOLLA ATAUL HUQ v. CHAIRMAN OF MANIKTOLLA MUNICIPALITY. 48 Cal. 378=57 I. C. 960=24 C. W. N. 969.

———Language—Date of coming into force of statute—Date of publication—If to be included or excluded—Rule of construction.

Under a rule framed by the Madras High Court the institution fee for plaints on the Original Side was raised by a notification in the Gazette and they were to come into force from the date of publication. The notification reached the High Court at 5 P. M. on a certain day when the offices had just closed. Held by the majority of the Special Bench that the new rules applied to all plaints filed on that day. Per Schwabe, C.J.—The word "from" preceding a date may mean "or and after" or after. The context and circumstances of each case should be looked at to arrive at the true construction. Unless there are valid reasons to the contrary if the named date is at the beginning of a definite limited period, i.e. where there is a terminus ad quem as well as a quo, then prima facie the first day is excluded. If the named date is at the beginning of an indefinite period the first day is included.

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.:—Where a statute fixes only the terminus a quo of a state of things which is envisaged as to last indefinitely, the common law rule is that portions of a day ought to be neglected and the order takes effect from the first moment of the day on which it is enacted or passed; when the order limits the period marked both by a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem, the former is to be excluded and the latter to be included in the reckoning.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.:—There is no hard and fast rule in construing the significance of the word "from." Each case must depend on its own facts. Justice and equity require that the date of notification ought to be excluded. (Schwabe, C. J., Coutts-Trotter and Kumaraswami Sastry, JJ.) COURT FEES, In re 45 M. L. J. 557=46 Mad. 685=(1923) M. W. N. 883=1924 Mad. 257.

———Language—Affirmation—Negative implication.

Although a statutory enactment expressed in affirmative languages, may sometimes be construed as having a negative implication; such implication must be a necessary and reasonable one. (Abdur Rahim, O. C. J., Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) GADI NEELAVENI v. MARAPPAREDDI GARI NARAYANA REDDI. 43 Mad. 94=37 M. L. J. 599=26 M. L. T. 377=10 L. W. 606=53 I. C. 847=(1920) M. W. N. 19 (F. B.).

———Language—"and"—"or".

It is well-settled that the word "and" may be read as "or" where it is necessary in order to carry out the obvious intention of the Legislature. (Maxwell on Statutes P. 33, 1 edition 3). (Wallis, C. J., Abdur Rahim, Oldfield, Srinivasa Aiyangar and Phillips, JJ.) KUNHALOOR PUTHIA VEETIL RAYARAPPA v. PARKUM PUNNISSERI KELAPPA. 40 Mad. 594=32 M. L. J. 110=(1917) M. W. N. 195=21 M. L. T. 245=39 I. C. 741=5 L. W. 617 (F. B.).

———Language—Not clear—Alteration of law—Intention of Legislature.

Though the first rule of construction is to give the words their ordinary and natural meaning it is also a recognised rule of construction that when the language is not clear the legislature did not mean any substantial alteration of the old law by doubtful words ordinarily when several specific instances precede a general term with the word "other" prefixed to it and where the rule of ejusdem generis is applied, the meaning of the general term is determined with reference to all the instances mentioned. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Language.

———Language of words—Grammatical meaning—Marginal note.

The most elementary canon of construction is that the words and phrases of a technical legislation are used in a technical sense if they have acquired one and otherwise in their ordinary meaning. The phrases and sentences are to be construed according to the rules of grammar. It must be presumed unless there is anything in the subject or context that the legislature uses the same word or phrase in the same sense. A marginal note cannot be called in aid to interpret the section. (Brockman, J. C., Stanyon and Mittra, A. J. Cs.) SALU BAI v. BAJAT KAN.
42 I. C. 200=13 N. L. R. 130 (F. B.).

———Language—Intention of legislature.

We are bound to look at the language used in the Act, construing it with reference to the object with respect to which the legislature has used that language but construing it in its ordinary grammatical sense, unless there is something in the subject-matter or context to show that it is to be understood in some other sense and doing all this we are to say what is the intention of the legislature expressed by that language. In other words the golden rule of construction is to declare that to be the intention of the legislature which appears to be expressed by the words used and understood in their ordinary sense with reference to the subject-matter and context unless that is manifestly absurd or unjust. Per Blackburn, J. in the House of Lords, 9 H. L. C. 32 Eastern Counties and London and Blackwell Ry. Co. v. Marriage. (Brockman, J. C. and Stanyon, A. J. C.) BALAJI v. GOPALA RAO. 33 I. C. 489=12 N. L. R. 51.

———Language.

Where language of statute is clear and unambiguous, courts should give effect to it, without regarding the question whether it has the effect of divesting a vested right or not. (Mittra, Offg. A. J. C.) MIYA SAHEB v. CHAMPA LAL.
23 I. C. 888=10 N. L. R. 42.

———Language—Words, same meaning throughout an Act.

Ordinarily a word keeps the same meaning at least throughout any one Act. (Hallifax, A. J. C.) KEKRA v. SADHU. 23 I. C. 238=10 N. L. R. 28.

———Language.

A phrase used in several codified laws, all emanating from the same source, one and the same significance must be attributed to it wherever it occurs provided it is not repugnant to the context. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) G. I. P. Ry. COMPANY v. AMRAOTI MUNICIPALITY.
16 I. C. 449=8 N. L. R. 107.

———Language—Legal term—Meaning.

In interpreting a statute, the settled rule of construction is that where the legislature uses a legal term which has a known significance, it must be assumed that the term has been used in that sense only and in no other. (Das, J.) JHARI SINGH v. EMPEROR. 56 I. C. 235=21 Cr. L. J. 443.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Liability.

———Language—Simplicity.

Statutes should be interpreted as simply as possible. When a document is stamped, though wrongly and inadequately, it must be taken to be insufficiently stamped and not unstamped. (Pratt, J.) THE COLLECTOR OF RANGOON v. ABDUL RAHMAN SIRCAR. 11 L. B. R. 316=1922 L. B. 27.

———Language—Not clear context.

Where the language of a statute is not clear the cause or necessity of the law being made should be considered; and every clause should be construed with reference to the context and other clauses of the Act so as to make a consistent enactment of the whole statute. (Hartnoll, Offg. C. J. and Ormond, J.) SEENA M. HANNIFF & Co. v. LIPTONS, LTD. 15 Cr. L. J. 337=7 Bur. L. T. 116=23 I. C. 689=7 L. B. R. 306.

———Language — Inconsistent with purpose of enactment—Modification of meaning of words used.

When the language of a statute in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words or even the structure of the sentence. (Twomey, J.) MUHAMMAD JEWA v. WILSON. 4 Bur. L. T. 83=10 I. C. 787=12 Cr. L. J. 246.

———Language—Ordinary meaning to be given.

It is to be assumed that words are used in their popular meaning unless they have acquired a technical meaning and legislature must be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed and consequently there is no reason for construction. ———Language—Change of presumption.

Liberal Construction.

———Liberal construction—Meaning by implication and reference.

Where the interpretation sought to be put upon the words is arrived at by implication and by reference, the court ought not to put a restricting and penalising construction. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) ABDUL KARIM v. ISLAMUNNISA BIBI. 38 All. 339=34 I. C. 231=14 A. L. J. 401.

———Liberal construction.

———Liberal construction.

A court should lean in favour of that view of the law which enable a party to get the fruits of an order in his favour, and not in favour of highly technical objections which would render the court's order a mere piece of waste paper. Liberal Interpretation.

———Liberal interpretation—Invasion of rights—Not to be imputed.

In a technical matter where the language of the statute does not expressly cover the case and where the interpretation sought to be put upon the words is arrived at by implication and reference, the court ought not to adopt a construction having a restricting and penalising operation unless driven to do so by the force of language. Maxim.

———Maxim — 'Expressio unius exclusio alterius'—Scope of the rule in modern legislation.

A general rule of construction of Acts of the legislature is expressio unius exclusio alterius (The express mention of one thing implies exclusion of another.) But the method of construction summarised in the maxim cannot be applied without limitation; for a failure to make an expression complete may easily arise from the accidents of legislative procedure, and it is common to find provisions put into statutes ex abundanti cautela and at the instance of parties interested. Consequently provisions sometimes found in statutes, enacting imperfectly or for particular cases only, that which was already and more widely the law have occasionally furnished ground for argument based on the maxim, that an intention to alter the general law was to be inferred from the partial or limited enactment. But the maxim is plainly inapplicable to such cases. The only inference which a court can draw from such superfluous provisions (which often find a place in Acts to meet unfounded objections and idle doubts) is that the legislature was either ignorant or unmindful of the real state of the law or that it acted under the influence of excessive caution. ———Preamble — Legislative proceedings — Reference to—Reasonableness or unreasonableness—Question of when relevant.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The question of unreasonableness of construction is relevant in considering the meaning of the statutory provision only where the language is reasonably capable of two constructions, one reasonable and the other unreasonable and not where it is quite plain. Where there is some ambiguity in an Act the preamble and the object of the Act can be referred to. Privies.

———Privies—Liability of.

Right conferred or liability imposed by a statute on a person applies to his legal representative, and if the statute confers the right or imposes the liability on that person as the owner of specific property such right or liability is conferred or imposed on the assignee of such ownership right, unless the reason of the rule of Law cannot clearly apply to anybody but the original owner, of the property or the original obligor. ———Privies—Rights and liabilities of.

Unless a statute expressly or by implication precludes the application of provisions awarding rights to or imposing civil liabilities on the privies of the person to whom the rights are given or on whom the liabilities are imposed, the privies are entitled or bound as the case may be, to the extent to which the original parties are so entitled or are so bound. The extent of the privy's liability however is not always co-equal with the extent of the liability of the person through whom he claims. (Ormond, J.) MA SHAWE ME v. P. A. R. M. CHETTY. 27 I. C. 788=8 Bur. L. T. 97.

Proceedings in Legislative Council.

———Proceedings of the Legislative Council—Interpretation according to natural meaning.

To ascertain the meaning of the words used in a section of a statute, reference to the proceedings in the Legislative Council upon its enactment is not permissible. The construction of a section of a statute must depend on its terms, and no theory of its purposes (viz., that it was introduced to reproduce the then existing state of the English law) could be entertained unless it is to be inferred ———Proceedings in Legislative Council.

In interpreting the meaning of a word in a legislative enactment it is the duty of the court to refrain from examining the discussion and the views of the legislative authority which enacted the Statute. Proviso to section.

———Proviso to section—Condition precedent.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A proviso is often a condition precedent to the enforcement of the operative clause and can never enlarge the scope of the section itself and therefore it would be incongruous to hold that an answer which necessitated the recording of reasons at its inception was intended to be capriciously set aside the next moment. Public policy.

———Public policy—Considerations of facility and practical importance—No arguments to the judge.

Considerations founded on views as to business which are obviously of the practical importance, would be rather arguments for the invocation of the legislature than an incentive to the putting of a forced construction on sections of an Act which, in themselves, are capable of only one interpretation. Where an Act has received a judicial construction, putting a certain meaning on its words, and the legislature in a subsequent Act in pari materia uses the same words, there is a presumption that the legislature used those words intending to express the meaning which it knew had been put upon the same words before, and unless there is something to rebut that presumption, the Act should be so construed, even if they were such that might originally have been construed, otherwise. ———Re-enactment—Prior judicial interpretation—Effect on.

The legislature is presumed to know, not only the general principles of law but the construction which the courts have put upon particular statutes; where a section of an Act, which has received a judicial construction is re-enacted in the same words, such re-enactment must be treated as a legislative recognition of that construction. The test as to whether a rule repeals a by-law is to see whether they are repugnant to each other. If the by-law and the rule can be read together, one supplementing the other, there is no repugnancy and therefore no repeal by implication. Retrospective effect.

A legislative enactment which repeals a previous law, either partially or wholly cannot prejudice vested rights acquired under decrees. Explicit language on the part of the Legislature is necessary to warrant a court in holding that a legislative body intended not only to change the law, but to alter it so as to deprive a litigant of a judgment rightly given and still continuing. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Retrospective effect.

———Retrospective effect—Act creating new duty.

A statute which impairs or destroys an existing vested right and creates a new duty, is never retrospective. A statute, in absence of clear words to the contrary is prospective in its operation. (Mookerjee, A. C. J., Fletcher and Richardson, JJ.) PROMOTHA NATH v. SORAR DASI. 24 C. W. N. 1011 = 31 C. L. J. 463 = 58 I. C. 327 = 47 C. 1108.

———Retrospective effect—Declaratory enactment—Mussalman Waqf Validating Act (VI of 1913).

Statutes which are properly of a merely declaratory character have a retrospective effect. The nature of a statute must be determined from its provisions and the mere fact that the expression, "if it is declared" has been used is by no means conclusive as to the true character of the legislation. (1898) A. C. 769, Foll (Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ.) NAWAB KHAJAH HABIBULA SAHEB v. KHAJAH SULEMAN QUADER. 30 C. L. J. 102 = 53 I. C. 764 = 24 C. W. N. 18.

———Retrospective effect.

A statute is prima facie prospective and existing rights are not disturbed thereby unless it contains clear words to that effect or unless having regard to its object it necessarily does so. Held, thus with reference to S. 66, C. P. C. of 1908. (Teunon and Greaves, JJ.) PROMONATH PAL v. SOURAV DASI. 50 I. C. 335 = 23 C. W. N. 604.

———Retrospective effect—Declaratory statute.

A declaratory statute is retrospective. To determine whether it is declaratory, its provisions must be looked to. Mere use of the words "It is declared" does not make it of a declaratory character. (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) JOTIRAM KHAN v. JONAKI NATH GHOSE. 33 I. C. 54 = 20 C. W. N. 258.

———Retrospective effect.

A statute is not retrospective simply because a part of the requisites for its action is drawn from a time antecedent to the passing of the law. (Chatterjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) ANAND KUMAR v. SECRETARY OF STATE. 40 Cal. 973 = 32 I. C. 774 = 20 C. W. N. 573.

———Retrospective effect—Limitation Act (1908).

The Limitation Act gives no right of action, but relates to procedure; hence it should be given retrospective effect. (Carnduff, J.) Limitation Acts and other procedural statutes though usually are used retrospectively, should not be so construed, when hardship or injustice might result from such retrospective construction. But the rule does not apply when the operation of an Act is postponed for sometime after it is passed. (Chatterjee, J.) A new Act of procedure would not apply where its application would prejudice rights established under the old one. (Mookerjee, Carnduff and Chatterjee, JJ.) MANJURI BIBI v. AKKEL MAHMUD. 17 C. L. J. 316 = 19 I. C. 793 = 17 C. W. N. 889.

———Retrospective effect—Postponement of Act—Effect.

The postponement of an Act has a retrospective effect and the people are warned by it of the change in law in good time. The Acts regulating procedure are generally retrospective in their effect. They should not be interpreted in a way to affect the vested rights. Right of appeal already accrued is such a vested right. (Johnstone, C. J.) ASARAM v. BUDHU MAL. 43 P. W. R. 1916=83 P. R. 1916= 35 I. C. 67=132 P. L. R. 1916.

———Retrospective effect—Procedure.

Acts of the legislature which regulate procedure, though in general retrospective in their effect, must not be interpreted so as to affect prejudicially the vested rights of the parties, to appeal.
